Night Attack on American Lines at San Fernando Successfully Re pulsed-Establishment of Civil Government in Cavite Province

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.] NEW YORK, July 1.-[Exclusive Dispatch. The Sun's Manila cable-gram, timed July 1, 11:55 a.m., says: "The transport Hancock sailed for San Francisco this afternoon with the First Nebraska Infantry and Batteries A and B of the Utah Light Artillery on board. Both of these bodies of troops reached Cavite with the second expe dition in July, 1898, and both have seen the severest service of the insurrection

"The Nebraskans have taken part in twenty-nine engagements. Thirtynine of the men of the regiment were killed in action, 166 were wounded, thirty-three died from disease and 842 are going home.

"The guns of the Utah Battery are scattered throughout every brigade. The Utah men have seen continued service throughout the insurrection and the organization has been represented in every engagement of importance. It lost eight men killed, sixeen wounded and four from disease.

"The Nebraskans owe much to their former commander, Col Stotsenberg, who was killed at Guingua. Both organizations have won the highest praise for gallantry.

TWO OPPOSITE VIEWS.

THE PHILIPPINES.

Official Military Opinion Differs what from That of Men in the Field-The Former is Rose ate, Latter Rather Gloomy.

[A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.] NEW YORK, July 1.—A dispatch to the Herald from Manila, July 1, via Hongkong, says:

"Two opposite views of the Philip-pine situation are held by those persons who have followed the American campaign with close attention.
"First is the official military view.

According to this the situation is now well in hand, and the campaign has been as successful as possible. The natives are tired of the insurrection and are more friendly toward the Americans than toward the insurgents. The insurgent army is made up almost entirely of brigands, who can no longer be held together with their leaders. The war will soon be over, it is declared, if the wet season holds off. The force of troops is sufficient for the emergency. Business is pick-ing up. The disorganized insurrection deprived of its resources is held together at present entirely by the hope given the rebels through the anti-annexation movement in the United States, and the American papers which reach here. The insurgent leaders are actuated solely by selfish, per-

States, and the American papers which reach here. The insurgent leaders are actuated solely by selfish, personal ambitions.

"The second view, which is held by military men in the field, is that the ability of our troops to drive the insurgents at will has been proved; the suppression of the insurrection depends upon the ability of the men in authority to cope with the situation and not upon muzzling the American press. The outlook at present is more gloomy for a speedy ending of the war than ever before. The method of making raids into the country and then withdrawing, leaving the friendly natives at the mercy of the returning insurgents, has tended to alienate the population and not materially to weaken the insurgents. The organization of the insurgents is good, and their resources are not greatly impaired. The fallure this season to take the railroads running through the valley of the rice country above San Fernando leaves to the enemy immense resources, and falls to protect the interests of foreign merchants. With the present methods of the war with the Filipinos, they can continue indefinitely. The only true method to pacify the country is to garrison all the important towns. To do this more than twice the number of troops already here, including the volunteers, are necessary with several regiments of mounted cavalry. Four thousand men being in the hospital. 4800 in the southern Islands, and 16,000 in Manila, Cavite and small garrisons, leaves only 8000 men for active campaigning. This number is not sufficient, since the troops in the north are in bad condition, many of the soldiers having irritated hearts, by reason of over-exertion. On account of the small number of troops available, new advances are constantly required and frequent changes of the exhausted regiments. There is great waste of time and energy of the men by long marches to the front. The non-combatants are more friendly toward the insurgents than toward the Americans on account,

ADMINISTRATION'S WORK. Postmaster-General Smith Show

What Has Been Accomplished.

[A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.] NEW YORK, July 1.—A special to the World from Washington states that in response to a request for an interview on the Philippine situation, Post-master-General Smith said: "The situation in the Philippines is the most important and absorbing question just at present. I am well aware that there is some restlessness on the matter and in some quarters no little impatience. There is a notion that the administration should have been more energetic, and when the Filipinos prolonged their warfare should have called for and sent for-ward more troops. But those who make this criticism do not know that the administration has recruited nearly two thousand men a week right along since Congress adjourned on March 4. They do not know that with these recruits do not know that with these recruits, and with the reinlistments a force of nearly forty thousand men has been raised within that time.

"They do not know that the Army Bill which was passed on March 2 practically compelled the reorganization-of-a, new army nearly a fourth as large as that which was raised for the Spanish war. They do not know that under the law authorizing the creation of the army for the Spanish war all of the regulars above 27,000, as well as all of the volunteers, had to be mustered out at the ratification of the peace treaty, and that while the new army bill provides for a force of 65,000 men, the whole number above 27,000 had to be raised afresh.

"On the ratification of peace with Spain, the President's problem was to reconstruct the army up to the maximum number of regulars permitted, viz: 65,000 men; he began that work im mediately. "About forty thousand men have now been added to the force, and of the recruits fully 70 per cent. were in the service during the Spanish war. This fact signifies two things: First, that they who served had no terrors from which they had gone through and were ready to serve again; second, that the force thus recruited was inured to the service and able to stand its hardships. mediately mare to the service and able to standits hardships.

"Besides, no married man is taken, The highest physical standard is enforced. No person applying with any physical defect or weakness is accepted. In this way the largest efficiency is obtained. It might have been possible to call for volunteers to have a rush to put them into camp, to have had the hurry and the possibilities of mistakes which came with the sharp action at the beginning of the Spanish war, but even if this had been done, troops could not actually have been sent to the Philippines faster than they have been, and they would not have been anything like as effective.

"Within two weeks 5000 additional men will be in the Philippines or on "Within two weeks 5000 additional men will be in the Philippines or on their way, and by August 1, before the close of the rainy season, there will be 35,000 regulars, or more, at the disposal of Gen. Ots, and with this force he will certainly be able to cope with the situation. If there should be need for more by September, they will be there.

"Gen. Otis has managed affairs in the Philippines with skill and judgment. He has never indicated a belief that he needed more than 30,000 effective troops.

"There is no trouble in the Philippines outside the Island of Luzon, Aggressive fighting is now restricted for about three months, because of the rainy season, but as soon as aggressive operations can be resumed short work will be made of the conflict.

"Without underestimating the dirficulties, it may be accepted that our government will be equal to the demands of the situation. It may be also accepted that if an additional force should prove to be required, there would be no hesitation in us-there would be no hesitation in using it.

"The Filipinos are not our enemies. What should be done in the Philippines when this rebellion of a single tribe is subdued, is a question of which I ought not to speak. The final determination of our policy rests with Congress.

"Meanwhile the President will hold the islands for the American people, and will give the inhabitants the largest amount of freedom and self-government consistent with the recognition of our sovereignty and the maintenance of peace, order and lawful administration in the archipelago. The exact terms and measures cannot be defined, however, at present. They will be subjects of conferences. "The first business is to establish peace; and that will be done at all nazards."

BRIG.-GEN. OTIS'S VIEWS. nsurrection Encouraged by Encmies of the Administration.
[A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.]

CHICAGO, July 1.—Brig.-Gen. H. G. Otis, who was with the Eighth Army Corps at Manila for nearly a year, and who spent part of yesterday in this city, left last night for New York on private business. Thence he will go to Washington for four or five days, and will then depart to his home in Los Angeles. Before leaving for the East, Gen. Otts said:

"I have no doubt that the delay of the Senate in ratifying the treaty with Spain served to encourage the Filiplnos in opposing Americans in con-trol. This delay served to make dangerous condition," he continued, "which might have been avoided by "Which might have been avoided by anything approaching prompt action by the Senate. The substances of some of the speeches made in the Senate, and which were communicated to the Filipinos by their emissaries in this country, encouraged them in the belief that they could count on no little support here.

"In this connection, too, there is not the least doubt they are being encouraged to continue their opposition by the report that our people are not in sympathy with the government's course, and that after the coming election the incoming administration will discontinue the war, and they will be granted their independence.

"When they talk about their rec."

preference."
Gen. Otis declared that with 50,000 men there should not be any difficulty in subduing the insurrection by the close of the coming dry season. He denied that his trip to Washington had anything to do with the reported offer of a Cabinet position.

I anticipate little opposition to the first part of this proposition to the first part of this proposition, and I have no doubt the American people will decide the latter part as they did three years ago.

"My reason for this belief is based on the fact that the United States is now entering on a renewed era of prosperity. Every promise of the Republican party has been fulfilled. There is not a man in the United States today out of work who wants work. This is the normal condition. Commercial prosperity is based on confidence, and the only thing which can destroy the conditions now prevailing is a change of administration."

"The trouble about the anti-trust campaign' is that they cannot make trusts a political issue. So far as a massing wealth in a manner to injure the public is concerned, the Republican party is just as opposed to it as the Democrats. The Democrats would like to use the anti-expansion idea, and possibly Admiral Dewey, but the combination would not do., and Admiral Dewey is so big that he would not permit his reputation as one of the great admirals of his time to be used for any political purpose.

THE BUFFALO CONFERENCE.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] BUFFALO, (N. Y.,) July 1.-A va riety of subjects which had been dis-cussed in caucus were presented at this morning's session of the National this morning's session of the National Social and Political Conference.

John S. Crosby of New York, was chosen chairman of the day. The first topic, "Civil Service," was introduced by Charles B. Wheeler, formerly chairman of the Buffalo Civil Service Commission. Mr. Wheeler advised reformers to work for the merit system at their homes. He thought President McKinley had gone too far in exempting 4000 employes from the operation of the Civil Service Reform law.

John S. Crosby discussed "Direct Legislation."

A COPPERHEAD RESOLUTION.

At tonight's session of the reform conference a tremendous row was stirred up by the introduction of the following resolution by Bolton Hall of New York:
"Resolved, that this conference con-

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] ST. LOUIS, July 1.-A special to the Post-Dispatch from Carbondale, Ill.,

"Union City, named from the fact. hat it is occupied by union miners, was the scene of a battle last night about midnight and as a result the town in ruins. The non-union ne-groes and other men employed by Brush at his mines near Fredonia having become crazed over the killing of the woman yesterday went to the camp which consists of nine houses, camp which consists of nine houses, and opened fire on them which was at once returned. The battle raged until the union miners ran from their homes and took refuge in a clump of timber close to the village. The non-union men men at once applied the torch to the houses and all were burned to the ground. After the men had destroyed considerable property burned to the ground. After the men had destroyed considerable property previously occupied by the union men, they moved on the woods, and until daylight the fussilade was kept up. No lives have so far been reported lost in the engagement at Union City. Union miners have been arriving at the scene of the trouble all night and the outcome must be a long-drawnout battle. Both sides seem determined to win.

THE REQUEST FOR TROOPS. [ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

SPRINGFIELD (III.,) July 1.-Acting Gov. Warder today received a tel-egram from Sheriff Gray at Carterville, saying he was powerless to con-trol the rioters ad asking that rifles and 200 troops be sent at once. The acting Governor immediately ordered 150 rifles and ammunition sent to Sheriff Gray and ordered him to sum-Sheriff Gray and ordered him to summon and arm a posse. No troops will be ordered out until the Sheriff's resources are exhausted. Sheriff Gray telegraphed that a Coroner's inquest was held over the body of the negress killed yesterday and several warrants issued. Sheriff Gray arrested three men, but when on his way to the jail his carriage was surrounded by the men's sympathizers, the horses cut loose and the prisoners released.

No further disorder had occurred at Union City up to noon today. Acting Governor Warder says he will not order troops to the scene until the Sheriff has exhausted all resources.

PRISONERS RESCUED.

PRISONERS RESCUED.

"When Coroner James Armstrong concluded the inquest at Cartersville over the negro woman, Annie Carr, who was killed by the mob that fired into the coach at the Fredonia mines, James Hicks, Ed Richie, Elli Brooks, George Dutton, Mike Brown, negroes, and John Piano, an Italian, were held as guility of the murder. These six were the only members of the mob that could be recognized by the witnesses. Sheriff Gray, who was present at the inquest, arrested Hicks, Ritchie and Brooks, being unable to find the rest. The prisoners were taken from him by a mob in the streets of Cartersville. He succeeded in getting away with Hicks, and landed him in jail here late last night. NEGROES'IN JAIL.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

There are 4000 men employed in the big works. The company asserts that only about 150 or 2000 of them are skilled workmen. It is true laborers were taken from Marion says:

The company has made no attempt to consult the men went into a labor organization when they had been forbidden.

"The two negroes who were taken from the Sheriff by the mob in the streets of Cartersville last night, were brought here at noon in the custody of two union miners and lodged in jail. Union miners from other towns are gathering there today in large numbers. Grave apprehension is felt by the officials that the gathering means continued and serious trouble for Brush's men and the non-union negro miners. The Sheriff has sent another message to cting Governor Warder this afternoon the course of which he said:

in the course of which he said:
"Nothing short of 200 soldiers well armed will control the situation at Cartersville. The non-union miners at Brush's are armed, and the union men Brush's are armed, and the union men are gathering with the announced intention of destroying the mine. The strikers are several hundred strong, determined and well armed. Order troops there at once. The situation is too serious, and the numbers engaged too strong for a sheriff's posse. Ship all guns to Marion. Over 1000 shots have been fired since noon yesterday.'"

Testimony as to Sheriff Young's Perversion of Duty.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] WALLACE (Iaho.) July 1.-Today J called up Sheriff 'Young' on the telephone, telling him of the riotous con-duct of armed men, and asking to be appointed a deputy sheriff. Young declined, saying he would refer the mat-ter to his deputy.

ter to his deputy.

Conner Melott, correspondent of the Spokesman-leview, testified to a conversation with the Sheriff before the riot of April 29, when Young objected to reports he was sending out, saying the witness should give the strikers "the best of it" in making reports.

Chris Eyre and four or five other deputies serving at that time were members of the union.

WALLACE (Idaho,) July 1 .- The de fense put only one witness, Sheriff Young himself, on the stand in the im-Young himself, on the stand in the impeachment case. He was called for information in addition to that given in the case against the County Commissioners. He said in his opinion arrests could have been made after the mob dispersed and settled down, but any attempt then or while they were still together would mean death to the persons making the arrests. He said he had no chance to make arrests afterward, as he was busy guarding the Last Chance mine, until May 3, when he was summoned before the Coroner's Jury. He was before that body three, days, and then was arrested by the military authorities. He had not attempted to shield the rioters or prevent the arrest of any one. Witness defied that he told Malott that he would try to prevent any trouble.

AMADGAMATED SCALE

Better Than a Year Ago-Trouble

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

PITTSBURGH, July 1.-The ale year of the Amalgamated Assoiation of Iron and Steel Workers be union than has been made for more than half a dozen years. Nine, individual firms and the representatives of the American Hoop Company, Republic Iron and Steel Company, and the Iron

Iron and Steel Company, and the Iron and Steel Sheet Manufacturers' Association have signed the scale so far, and a number of other signatures are expected before the day closes. The mills that have not signed, but at which scales have been presented, are the Spang, Chalfant & Co., Pittsburgh Steel and Iron Company, and Moorehead Bros. & Co. Of these all but about fifty men are out at Spang's, the works of the forge company have shut down and Moorehead's plant is still in operation. The local firms not recognizing the Union are the Carnegie Steel Company, Jones & Laughlin, Park Steel Company, J. Painter & Sons, William Clarke & Co., and Singer, Nimick & Co. At several of these the workmen are secretly connected with the Amalgamated Association, but no attempt was made to insist upon the scale and all the plant travers. attempt was made to insist up and all the plants were in full operation today.

As a result of the failure to agree upon tin plate soale, all the mills in the country are idle today, barring four non-union plants, and nearly 50,-000 skilled and unskilled workmen are out of employment pending a settlement.

the men went into a labor organization when they had been forbidden. The question of wages does not enter into the controversy, for the men were as well paid, and in many cases better, than in the mills recognizing the union, and paying what is known as the scale rate.

Open meetings were held by the association at Homestead some time ago for the purpose of gaining a foothold. The meetings were well attended, but the men were afraid to show their colors. Many of them were discharged for their attendance at these gatherings. The plan was then abandoned, and secret work begun. The following official statement was issued by the Carnegie Steel Company today:

"With reference to the reported strike last night at the Homestead Steel Works, it was stated at the office of the Carnegie Steel Company today that the mills were running full during the night, and are running full this morning, and that none of the employe's left the works during the night as reported. A number of workmen have been discharged, including a committee of thirteen, which called on Superintendent Corey yesterday to request the reinstatement of men previously discharged for eause.

"The plant will close down at noon today as is usual on Saturday."

The Amalgamated Association has arranged for a mass-meeting of the employées of Carnegie's at Homestead tonight. Vice-President Benjamin I. Davis has arrived in the city and will remain until the matter is settled. He says he does not anticipate a repetition of the battle of 1892.

florrible Tragedy Near Garfield Wash.-Various Crimes in California - Quarantine of Alleged Plague Ship.

BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.] SEATTLE (Wash.,) July 1 .- [Exclusive Dispatch.] Rampart is as rich as any, if not the richest mining district on the American side of the Alaskan boundary. With a little development it will produce over $1,000,000 this sea-son. A rich strike has been made on Eureka Creek and the tributaries of the Tanana, thirty miles from Rampart, and a big stampede has taken place. A wealth of gold has been discovered Hoosier Creek. Capt. A. J. Balliet, e famous Yale oarsman, being the Rampart City boasts a population of between 2200 and 2300, several well-equipped general stores, a few saloons, where gambling is not unknown, and about four hundred and forty-nine cab-ins. It has no church, but there is one minister in town looking for business. The Circle City mining district will produce more gold this year than any other period in its history. Such is the news brought to Seattle by Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Collins, formerly of Los Angeles, the first to come out this year from Rampart City. They left May 26, on the river steamer Monarch, before the last of the high cakes of ice had ceased to float to They arrived in Skagway in time the Humboldt, but waited for Cottage City, which arrived sev-

"I witnessed a stampede to Eureka Creek. This creek heads into the di-vide on the other side of the head of the Big Manook. There will be a great deal of prospecting in this district this spring and summer. If the returns are what indications promise, it will be a great mining district. We raised $2000 in Rampart as soon as the discovery was announced and set men to work cutting an eight-foot road, thirty miles long, to Eureka. This will make that section tributary to Rampart and in-orease the importance of the town as a distributing point.

"I suppose everybody has heard of Capt. Balliet, formerly a famous Yale oarsman. He has struck it rich on Hoosier Creek. Indications are he will take out $500,000. He pegged hway on his claim for a long time without striking a thing. He would go down into the frozen earth foot by foot, throw-ing out dirt with a shovel until he was twenty feet below the surface. I have never heard of another man in the country accomplishing so much, and they have all tried it. Well, after all his hard luck, Balliet struck a pay streak just before we came away. In going to bedrock he took out $500 in

SENTENCED TO DEATH.

Arlzona Murderer Must Pay Penalty for His Crime.
[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

PRESCOTT, (Ariz.,) July 1.—Ed Lewis, alias Lovell, who shot and killed a waiter at the Harvey Eating house at Ashfork in the early part of May, was found guilty of murder in the first degree today, with the death penalty affixed. This is the first murder case in this county under the law passed last winter, requiring the jury to affix a penalty.

Lovell hails from Illinois, and has served two terms in the penitentiary; once from Flagstaff, for burglary, and once from Tucson for forgery. Ex-Associate Justice Hawkins, who sen-tenced him both times, was called as a witness in the case.

TUITION IS FREE.

Action Imposing a Registration Fee at Berkeley Rescinded.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] SAN FRANCISCO, July 1.-No registration or tuition fee will be charged the students of the University of California next year. By a vote of 13 to 3 the regents today, at a special meeting called by Gov. Gage, rescinded the action of the board imposing the fee. The meeting was well at-tended, and an animated discussion preceded the vote by which the pre-vious action of the board was nullified. For the first time since his election,

Gov. Gage presided at the meeting. Lieut.-Gov. Neff and Stephen M. White also made their first appearance. The Governor read a long address, pro-testing against the proposed exaction of a registration fee. Regent Kirk then moved that the tax on students be repeoled, and, after an animated de-bate, the motion was carried by the following vote:

Yeas—Gage, Neff, Anderson, Kirk, Budd, Foote, Pardee, Rodgers, Slack, Wallace, Waymire, White, Barnes.
Nays—Houghton, Rowell, Hallidie.
The board then went into executive

PROF. WHEELER'S CONDITIONS.

Associated press night report.]

San francisco, July 1.—The secret session lasted for more than an hour. It transpired that the committee appointed at the last meeting to inform Benjamin Wheeler of his election to the presidency at a salary of $10,000 per annum, had received a reply from him saying that he would not consider the offer unless the regents are the recognition by the regents of the president's right to make all appointments in the faculty; the right of the president in the faculty; the right of the president between the faculty and the regents, and the recognition of the rights of the president to recommend all professors and instructors for promotion, and, especially his entire power in the matter of salaries. Lastly, when the regents shall have decided on any measure by a majority vote, Prof. Wheeler asks that the entire board shall give its support to the measure, and to the president without factional opposition.

Along with the letter came a telegram from Wheeler saying that he nad seen Mrs. Hearst in New York and that she approved his requests. After considerable discussion the regents decided to invite Prof. Wheeler to come to California at their expense and talk over the matter, with a view of reaching an agreement.

The Finance Committee will report at the next meeting of the board some plan for relieving the fianancial troubles of the university.

Gragg is about 33 years of age, and lives on a farm. Yesterday he says he detected his wife and a neighbor named Fitzgerald, in a compromising position, to which act he believed his wife's guest, Mrs. Maude Cârroll of Spokane, was an accessory. Gragg spent the night with a neighbor, to whom he told his troubles. He said he intended to go to Garfield in the morning to arrange for a division of his property and a separation from his wife. About 4 o'clock he set out, stating he would go by way of his home and change his clothes. On arriving there he asked his wife for his gun, and she told him that she had hid it. He then drew his pocket knife and attacked her. He slashed her throat and face, and stabbed ner in the abdomen. She may recover.

He then made for the other woman and butchered her in a frightful manner. After trying the knife on his throat he ran upstairs for his razor, and both women, streaming with blood and in their night clothes, fied to a neighbor's house.

Gragg used the razor on his own throat, almost severing the windpipe. Gragg is about 33 years of age, and

When the time came for selecting the place of the next meeting, speeches were made in favor of Hollister and Visalia. In the voting the proposition was carried over. Tonight there was an entertainment at the Fifthstreet Methodist Episcopal Church. The programme consisted of an address by Charles A. Storey of Stanford University. Miss Ethel Pouge read an essay and Mercle A. Tuck read an essay on "The Influence of Books." Indications are that the convention will not adjourn before Monday afternoon, and that the place of next year's meeting will be Hollister. Tomorrow will be devoted principally to religious observances.

MURDER AT FRESNO. Donnelly, Wounded in China town, Dies from Injuries.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] FRESNO, July 1.-Dan Donnelly who was shot in Chinatown early Tues-day morning, died at 11 o'clock this morning from the effects of his wounds. There is considerable mystery sur rounding the shooting. At the time he was shot, Donnelly claimed he had been robbed in a house of ill-repute, when he accused a woman of the theft when he accused a woman of the theft, he was shot by at unidentified persons. Donnelly took to his heels, but was pursued by Jack Brooks, a bartender in the Favorite saloon. Brooks admits pursuing Donnelly, but claims the latter fired at him first, Officer Tony Rice also took a hand/in the shooting, and it was thought at the time that the officer had fired the frial shot as the bullet extracted from annelly's abdomen was of a 44 caliber, the same as that fired by Rice.

of a 44 caliber, the same as that fired by Rice.

The District Attorney this morning swore to a complaint charging Charles Ardell, manager of the Golden West saloon, with murder. It is claimed that Ardell also used a 44-caliber pistol and fired the fatal shot. Jack Brooks was also charged with murder.

gates an Opinion and Assessor Caldwell Immediately Enforces it in Los Angeles County.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] SAN FRANCISCO, JJuly 1.-Deputy Attorney-General Abbott has furnished the State Board of Equalization with his opinion on the right of the board to assess refrigerator, cil, beer, beef to assess retrigerator, cil, beer, beef and other cars, not owned by the Southern Pacific Company, and operating in more than one county, all of which have heretofore escaped assessment. The gist of the opinion is as Refrigerator cars, owned by person or corporations (not railroad corporations or engaged in railroad business.) are to be assessed by the county assessors. Oil cars, owned by foreign or domestic individuals or corporations (other than railroad) are to be assessed by the county assessors. Beer cars, for the shipment of beer, owned by local brewerles or by persons or corporations (other than railroad) are to be assessed by the county assessors. Ordinary freight cars, owned by railroad companies, domestic or foreign, are to be assessed by the State Board of Equalization, irrespective of the use to which such cars are placed. Stock cars, used for shipment of race horses, or owned by persons or corporations (other than railroad) are to be assessed by the county assessors. In each of the above classes which are to be assessed by the county assessors, the property will be assessed the same as any other personal property, as provided by law. The classes above mentioned to be assessed by the State Board of Equalization will be assessed by the board in the same manner as other rolling stock (owned by railroads) in the manner as provided by law. The fact that any of the above property is taxed in other States is no reason why such property should not be assessed for and pay taxes in this State.

In cases where it is proper for the State Board of Equalization to act, as hereinbefore stated, it will proceed as provided in section 3665 of the Pollitical Code, as amended in 1897 (stator corporations (not railroad corporations or engaged in railroad business, as provided in section 3665 of the Political Code, as amended in 1897 (statutes 1897, page 402.)

The members of the State Board of Equalization have called on Assessor Dodge and asked him why he has not assessed the bonds of Spring Valley and kindred corporations. The Assessor replied that the former, board had ruled that these bonds were not assessable, but that he would assess them if the existing board instructed him to do so. The equalizers said they were satisfied the bonds are assessable, but they declined to give instructions, until an opinion had been obtained from the Attorney-General. If the opinion agreed with the sentiment of the Board of Equalization, Dr. Dodge will add at least $15.000.000 to his assessment roll.

In Sacramento and San Joaquin counties the bonds of quasi public corporations have been assessed.

[County Assessor Caldwell has assessed 198 fruit express cars, which were in Los Angeles county the first Monday in March, and it is anticipated that an amount very little less than $1000 will be realized as a result. The authority to assess the cars came to Mr. Caldwell yesterday foremon, and he at once made a demand on the local agents of the Continental Fruit Express and the Fruit Growers' Express companies to produce their records of the cars in the county on the first Monday in March. After telegraphic communication with the records of the cars in the county on the first Monday in March. After telegraphic communication with the general offices at San Grancisco, the local agents made statements to the effect that they would pay the taxes on their cars. Approximately the tax will amount to 2 per cent, although the difference in the rates in different school districts will determine the exact rate. Taking into consideration the age and use of the cars, they are averaged as valued at $400 each.]

NEW YORK, July 1.—[Exclusive dispatch.] The Sun's London cableram says Belgium this week has been passing through a serious political crisis. People are apt to think of Bel-gium as quite a little nation, but there s scarcely a country in Europe where political parties are so widely divided or in which there are so many opportunities for serious social upheavals The government's intimation that it is ready to find a basis for an under-standing has tided over the present danger, and it seems likely that a compromise will be arranged.

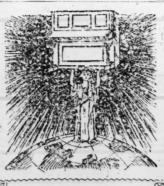

As regards parties the dividing lines that bitter one of religion. The Conervatives are unbending Clericals and Liberals are aggressive secularists The workingman, and notably the nu nerous miners, are nearly revolution The 930,000 Clerical voters sen-

Three months ago the Liberals ocialists made peace in order to rece iffy this condition at the next election. Fo defeat this coalition the government introduced an electoral bill, which aused the present upheaval. This bill octensibly provides for proportional representation, but actually provides for representation of minorities in a few effice returning six or more depuies, leaving the others unaffected, as

TASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT. BREST (France,) July 1.-The Sfax had several plates and her bulwarks slightly damaged by the heavy bump of the Caudan against her sides when Dreyfus was transferred, the sea be ing rough.

The only incident of the arrival of the prisoner at Brest was the cheering by two sloops manned by buys belonging to the training ship Borda which passed the Sfax as she was proceeding to her moorings.

Commander Coffiniere landed alone this evening and proceeded to the residence of Admiral Barrera, with whom he had a half hour's interview. In the course of the conversation had residence of Admiral Barrera, with whom he had a half hour's interview. In the course of the conversation had with him late tonight by the representative of the Associated Press, the admiral said:

"Until this afternoon I had no instructions respecting the Sfax, but now that Commander Coffiniere has landed, I am enabled to give you a few details. First of all Dreyfus has been in the best of health during the voyage and has ha'd an excellent appetite. He was given an officer's cabin, which was especially arranged for his convenience. This cabin has not been changed in any way, and tomorrow the newspaper men will be allowed to see it. Dreyfus wore during the voyage a white linen suit, the usual attire of French officers in the colonial service.

"The Sfax received its modified orders in a sealed letter on touching at Cape St. Vincent, These orders, which were unknown, even to myself, were to proceed to Quiberon, where she was instructed to arrive at 9 o'clock on the evening of June 30. The Caudan and the guardship L'Orient received orders on Thursday to meet the Sfax and left port the same evening. The Sfax not being due until Friday, the Caudan awalted her outside the port of Port Aliquen. A heavy sea was running and the vessel's position was somewhat dangerous, in view of the fact that she took on board no pilot and that a thick mist prevailed during the greater part of the time.

"The Sfax arrived on Friday, and Dreyfus, as you know was landed, though not—without some difficulty. The Sfax left again at 3 o'clock in the morning, avoiding the semophores as, she desired not to be signalled until her arrival at Brest. In order to prevent the military from joining in the demonstration upon the arrival of the Sfax and to enable the authorities to cope with any possible disorder, all the troops and marines were confined to barracks that evening, but there had been absolutely no scene of disorder anywhere."

As an illustration of the mystery with which the government has sur-barracks that evening, but there had been absolutely no scene of disorder anywhere."

As an illustration of the mystery with which the government has surrounded the movements of Dreyfus, the Associated Press is able to state that Admiral Barrera this morning had a special train, consisting of two first-class carriages, concealed in a tunnel on the branch line between the arsenal and the main line, ready for Dreyfus on the arrival of the Sfax, as the Admiral up to that time had not been officially notified of the arrival of Dreyfus at Rennes. The orders for this train were countermanded on the receipt of a dispatch from M. Viguie, chief of the secret police, announcing the arrival of Dreyfus at Rennes.

RENNES (France,) July 1.—[By Atlantic Cable.] Dreyfus arrived here at 6 a.m., via l'Orient and Redon. The prisoner appeared to be in good health. He wore a blue suit, gray overcoat and soft felt hat. His hair is turning gray and his beard is of a reddish color. He held himself very erect.

The landing of Dreyfus at Quibero was almost unnoticed. At 9 o'clock yesterday evening, the guardship Caudan put to see to meet the Sfax, which had been sighted. The unward, which had been sighted. The unusual bustle dan put to see to meet the Sfax, which had been sighted. The unusual bustle attracted many people to the harbor, but as they saw nothing the crowd dispersed. The only persons remaining were those who knew who the person to be landed was.

The weather was most stormy, and for a time it was feared it would be impossible to effect a landing. Four hours the Caudan and the Sfax pitched and rolled. It seemed impossible for them to approach each other in the rough sea.

On the landing stage were M. Viguie, the chief of detectives; M. Hennion, a commissary of police, and a force of gendarmes and police inspectors. Finally at 1 a.m., a cutter, manned by the men and in charge of a naval officer, put off from the Caudan and went alongside the Sfax. The boat rowed to the shore, where Dreyfus was landed at 1:30 a.m. A company of infantry was drawn up at the landing point. Dreyfus, who had been be aught ashore in the boat, was immediately placed under the guard of a captain of engineers and a sergeant and corporal of gendarmes, who formally handed the prisoner over to M. Viguie. The latter then entered a landau with Dreyfus and two detectives, and started for the railroad station.

Dreyfus did not speak a word. He a landau with Dreyfus and two detectives, and started for the railroad station.

Dreyfus did not speak a word. He personally opened the door of the compartment of the special train, consisting of three carriages and a baggage van, which was in waiting. When the train was about to start the local health officer refused to permit Dreyfus to leave on the ground that he had just arrived from the colonies. The matter was quickly arranged, however, and the train proceeded.

Dreyfus was only visible for a moment to the reporters.

The train stopped at Rabelais, three kilometres from Rennes. There the party alighted and quickly entered a carriage drawn by two horses, which immediately started at a sharp advance. It was 5:30 a.m. At the level crossing of the line, a wagonette, containing the prefect of the department of Ille et Villaine, M. Viguie and three inspectors, joined the party.

An amusing incident occurred there. The woman in charge of the crossing, when told that if she watched she would see Dreyfus, asked:

"Who is Dreyfus, asked:

"Who is Dreyfus? I have never even heard of him."

ARRIVAL AT RENNES. The drive from Rabelais to Rennes was without incident. Owing to the precautions the prisoner passed un-noticed in front of the arsenal. Workmen reading the posters there did not turn their heads, little suspecting who was passing. 'he clock was striking 6 when the crowd which had been waiting since midnight around the prison—the people beginning to think themselves the victims of a practical joke—saw a landau surrounded by gendarmes behind the station. Then they all cried with one voice: 'There he is,' At this cry the people started off to meet the carriage, and suddenly troops and mounted gendarmes hurried madly forward, yelling and shouting, as if accompanying a fire engine, instead of accosting a prisoner. The carriage was driven so fast that it covered the distance within a few minutes, passing the watchers like a flash. It was a race for the prison gates between the gendarmes and the captive and the spectators. The gates then opened suddenly, and about twenty gendarmes rushed out and captive and the spectators. The then opened suddenly, and stwenty gendarmes rushed out barred the street, pressing back crowd with rifle stocks.

The transformation from tranquillity to a wild scene of gesticulation almost defied description. The suddenness of the movement stupefied everybody as much as, apparently, it did the prisoner, whose face showed from the anickly-rassing carriage. But beprisoner, whose face showed the quickly-passing carriage. But be-d the exclamations of surprise and josity there were no cries of any sort raised.

Preceded by his guards, Dreyfus entered the prison, and was consigned to the care of the government, and was taken to a cell on the second story. The rain fell heavily all night, but the sun shown out brightly when Dreyfus entered the prison.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. HUSBAND AND WIFE.

The governor of the prison sen Mme. Dreyfus the news of the arriva Mme. Dreyfus the news of the arrival of her husband, and she immediately went to the government and asked permission to see the prisoner. Leave was granted, the faithful wife entered the prison almost unobserved, and was conducted to cell No. 830, accompanied by Mme. Havet. The meeting between the long-parted husband and wife was most touching. They remained long clasped in each other's arms, tears and smiles intermingling with tender endearments.

Mme. Dreyfus issued from the prison in a state of collapse. She found her husband much aged, with beard and hair whitened and body shrunken and stooped. She said Dreyfus knew nothing of the events of the past two years.

The weening wife acknowledged the ing of the events of the past two years.

The weeping wife acknowledged the courtesy with which she has been treated. The gendarme who was or-dered to be present at the interview carried out instruction, and kept at a discreet distance. THE PRISONER'S APPEARANCE.

Gazette's account of the landing of Dreyfus says: "He was almost entirely hidden by "He was almost entirely hidden by a hooded cloak, and as there was no light beyond a few lanterns, it was only possible to catch the barest glimpse of his unkempt gray beard and haggard, anxious features. "When the prisoner saw his wife he Wants to Visit the States Which Furnished Volunteers So He Can Greet the Returned Soldiers.

Secretary Alger Revokes an Orde gard to Letting Army

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] WASHINGTON, July 1.—Senator Carter of Montana today called upon the President to present him a forma invitation to visit Great Falls, Helena, Butte and Missoula, when he goes West on his trip. The President said he has not abandoned his intention to make a western trip if conditions par-mit, but stated that he would not be able to attempt the trip before the middle of August. He could not fix a date, and could not say positively that he would go; he could only say that he would like to pass through Montana. This is taken to indicate that the President will start on his western President will start on his western rip late in the summer, and that he will try to go to a number of western States which furnished volunteer troops in the Philippines. In this way he will be able to shake hands with the returned coldiers.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] WASHINGTON, July 1.—President cKinley today presented to the rench Ambassador, M. Cambon, a superb silver loving cup, in recogni-tion of the Ambassador's friendly serv-ices in the negotiations which restored peace between the United States and

The beautiful testimonial was sent The beautiful testimonial was sent by Secretary Hay to the French Embassy, accompanied by a note from the Secretary in which he expressed sincere appreciation of M. Cambon's considerate and disinterested services and tendered the loving cup as an evidence of the esteem felt for him. The cup is of massive proportions and chaste design, and the initial significance of the gift is shown by the blending of the French and American coats of arms. Around the outside of the bowl in raised old English text, runs the following inscription: "Presented by the President of the United States to his excellency, M. Jules Cambon, Ambassador of France, in token of his friendly services in the negotiation of the protocol of peace between the United States and Spain, August 12, 1898."

The bowl is supported on the shoulders of three American eagles. These in turn are on a massive silver pedestal, around which circle the thirteen stars emblematic of the thirteen original States. The three handles of the cup are myrtle leaves, symbolic of the peaceful offices which M. Cambon has performed. On the three faces of the cup, where the handles join the bowl, appear the coat of arms of France with the letters "R. F."—Republique Francaise.

Altogether the President's gift is one of uncommon richness and artistic beauty. When the gift and the letter were received at the French Embassy, M. Cambon was absent, not having returned from his New England trip. by Secretary Hay to the French Em-

State Department Satisfied With the Consul at Dawson.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] WASHINGTON, July 1.-The State Department, having had some correspondence recently with United States Consul McCook, at Dawson City, regarding newspaper charges against him of improper and undignified conduct, has dismissed the case. The investigation satisfied the officials that the Consul, while perhaps indiscreet in the instance complained of, had suffered to some extent from persecution on account of proper official acts on RECIPROCITY WITH JAMAICA.

Treaty Concluded by the Conferees at Washington. [ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, July 1.-The reciprocity treaty with Jamaica was con-cluded at the State Department today at a conference between Commissione Kasson, in behalf of the United States, and Mr. Tower, the British Charge d'Affaires. The Jamajcan Charge d'Affaires. The Jamarean treaty is now to be forwarded to Kingston for the approval of the colonial authorities, and when this is given, the formal signing of the instrument will occur.

All parties concerned have been placed under the strictest reserve, as it is said that the discussion of details of the convention just concluded might prove prejudicial in both countries. It is known, however, that the convention concluded today is under section 4 of the Dingley law, providing for reciprocity treaties, and is not a mere "arrangement," as provided a mere "arrangement," as provided for by section 34 of the act. The concessions given to Jamaica differ materially from those allowed the other British West Indian colonies, mainly because of the recent tariff law enacted by Jamaica, which had special application to the United States.

DISPUTED WATER FRONTS.

Railway Officials Carry Their Griev. ance to Alger.
[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, July 1.—Secretary Alger today gave a hearing to President J. J. Hill of the Great Northern Railroad, and Vice-President Daniel H. Lamont of the Northern Pacific Railway, regarding harbor lines at Seattle and Tacoma, Wash. There is a disagreement between the State authorities and private parties and owners of lands along the water fronts of these cities, which has been brought before the War Department in an application for the establishment of harbor lines. It is claimed by the State Harbor Commission that the general government has no authority to establish such lines, as the State owns the tide lines, and has the authority to establish its lines. The claim is made by the property-owners along the water fronts that the State has established lines in sixty feet of water, while piers cannot be built out so far and that thirty feet depth is sufficient. The State gives the property-owners an opportunity to lease the land between the thirty-foot depth and sixty-foot depth, but-if they do not lease it, claims the right to lease to other parties. The property-owners ask that the government establish lines at about the thirty-foot depth, and this was the request which was being considered today. Surveys have been made of the harbors by the engineers and maps made, which were examined by the Secretary.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—Secretary Alger today revoked that portion of the brider of the Assistant Secretary of War relating to the proposal for certain ordnance, which directed that the award to the Briggs-Seabury Gun and Ammunition Company be annulled, and that new bids be invited. The contract for forty 6-pounders and forty 15-pounder rapid-fire giuns, mounts and ammuni-tion will therefore be retained by the Briggs-Seabury Company. That por-tion of the order which imposes the penalties for delay under their present contract for $700,000, was approved.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—The statement of the public debt at the cloze of the fiscal year 1899 shows that the debt, less cash in the treasury, amounted to $1,155,320,235, which is a decrease, as compared with June 30, 1898, of $13,571,172. This decrease is accounted for by a corresponding increase. counted for by a corresponding increase in the cash on hand.

Better Than Expected.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—Contrary to the expectations of the treasury officials, the government expenditures during the fiscal year just closed, exceeding the receipts by only $88,875,889. One month ago the officials predicted that the deflict might exceed $100,000,000. Call on National Banks

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.] NEW YORK, July 1.-[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Sun's Berlin cable gram says the Cologne Gazette pub-lishes a dispatch from Apia which says it was due to the labors of the Samoan Commission that the disarma ment of the hostile factions was so quickly accomplished. The native warriors returned to their homes under the escort of two warships, owing to threatened dissatisfaction among the Mataafans. The royal residence at Mulinuu has been cleared out and Malietoa Tanu will shortly be sent to one of the Fiji Islands.

SATISFACTION AT WASHINGTON. [ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, July 1.—The reports from Samoa on the progress being made by the high commission toward a settlement of the disturbed conditions, are gratifying here. As to Chief Justice Chambers's future, nothing is assured. If he is to resign, as part of the scheme, of compromise projected by the commission, it is probable that the administration will provide him with another post. It is surmised, however, that the Chief Justice's retirement will be entirely voluntary, in which case the President would be relieved of the necessity of finding another place for him.

Though the commission has abolished the Samoan kingship out of hand, that action is not necessarily final, and is subject to the approval of the three powers. But there is little doubt that unanimity will be had on that point. [ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

Kautz has submitted to the Navy Department his final report of his ac-Department his high report of his ac-tions while at Apia on the Philadel-phia. JUMPS FROM THE BRIDGE.

Unidentified Man Seeks Death in the East River.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] NEW YORK, July 1 .- An unidentified man dropped from the center span of the Brooklyn bridge early today, about 130 feet from the water. Two men, who saw the man climbing over the rail, described him as about 54 years of age, of fair complexion and weighing about 200 pounds. In falling he made several revolutions and struck horizontally on the water. On the bridge, near the place where the man took his fatal drop, were found a brown coat and a black fedora hat, but these afforded no clew to his identity. The body has not been recovered.

BELGIAN DISORDERS. Withdrawal of the Electoral Bill Urged Upon the King.

They informed His Majesty that they could no longer be responsi-ble for the maintenance of order, if the ministry did not withdraw the Electoral Bill. The King replied that his possibilities of interference were limited by the constitution.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.1 BERLIN, July 1.—[Special Cable etter. Copyright, 1899.] The canal Letter. Copyright, 1899.] The canal question overshadowed everything this week, and the final outcome is more doubtful than ever. The Frankfurter Zeitung discusse the Frankturter Zeitung discusses the men likely to play leading roles, and says Baron von Koeller, the Goyernor of Schleswig-Holstein, is still in great favor with the Emperor, but as a great friend of the Agrarians, he would be the last to act against them.

he would be the last to act against them.

Count Eulenburg is also mentioned. He has long been regarded as a man with a large political future, but as he is also a strong Agrarian, he is another impossibility.

The discussion of possible ministers seems premature in—a country where ministries are so little responsible to the Legislature as in Germany.

The Diet takes a recess next week until August, when it will reassemble and resume the discussion of the Canal Bill August 15, when the fate of the ministry will be settled. In the meanwhile the correspondent of the Associated Press learns from an excellent source that attempts will be made by the Centrists and Liberals to reach a compromise on the canal and reformation of municipal election questions, so that they may present a united front.

TURN IN PRUSSIAN POLITICS.

TURN IN PRUSSIAN POLITICS. Whatever the result of the present crisis, it is certain it marks a turncrisis, it is certain it marks a turning point in Prussian politics. The Agrarians have shown such stubbornness in opposition to the progressive classes, that the conflict must continue until one or the other permanently gains the supremacy. Even the moderate Liberals are more than ever before incensed at the Agrarian reactionary tendencies. It seems as if the conflict could not end without leaving a permanent mark on Prussian political history.

EMPEROR'S WORDS DISCUSSED

EMPEROR'S WORDS DISCUSSED. The adjournment of the Reichstag has been followed by a lively press dis-cussion in regard to mentioning in decussion in regard to mentioning in debate the Emperor's relations to the Reichstag. Count von Ballestrem, the president introduced an innowation of the old rule that the words of the monarch are not subject to discussion, by admitting such discussion where the words were printed in the official Reichsanzeiger. Near the close of the Anti-strike Bill discussion. Herr Brefeld, the Prussian Minister, of Commerce, sharply criticised the president for permitting a reference to words of the Emperor. The president replied with sharpness and directness.

The papers admit the difficulty of observing the old_rule of constitutional monarchs that the monarch only speaks through the ministers, for the frequent speeches of the Emperor on political subjects render the observation of the rule almost impossible.

It is said the letter will be published when Admiral Diedrichs returns to Germany.

TARIFF RETALIATION. The Barmen Chamber of Commerce demands decided action toward the demands decided action toward the United States in tariff matters, and suggests that American goods be subjected to the same conditions here as German goods in the United States in regard to consular authentication of invoices and fees. The Agrarlan press strongly indorses this, and notes the fact that the Barmen chamber is a free-trade body.

olored Man Rounded Up Last Night fer a Pemona Constable.

Constable Slanker of Pomona called at the Police Station last night and asked the assistance of the detectives in locating Thomas Newman, colored, who is wanted in Pomona on a charge of burglary. Detectives Auble and Hawley went out and soon returned with Newman, whom they succeeded in locating without much trouble.

Newman is charged with entering a furnished house in Pomona, the owners of which are at present visiting in the East, and carrying away household articles, one at a time, until he had nearly stripped the house of everything movable. which he disposed of to a sec-

movable, which he disposed of to a second-hand man.

The house was in the hands of a real estate agent for rent, and it was not known that the place had been burglarized until Constable Slanger accidentally discovered some of the bed linen, in the second-hand man's place, which he recognized by the laundry mark. The house was then examined, and the discovery made that it had been systematically despoiled.

Slanker secured from the second-hand man a description of the person who had sold him the articles, and the description fitted Newman, who had been living in Pomona for the past three months. When Slanker discovered that Newman had left Pomona he came to this city in search of him. Newman left Yum: there months ago, where he met a colored girl with whom he became infatuated. Yum: there months ago, where he met a colored girl with whom he became infatuated. The girl left Yuma and settled in Pomona, where she was followed by her dusky admirer. Being without funds it is alleged that he burglarized the house in order to supply himself with the money necessary to keep him in the good graces of his inamorata. Newman has a record in Los Angeles. In 1896 he served 100 days in the City Jail for petty larceny, and on December 12 of the same year he was arrested by Detectives Auble and Hawley on a charge of burglary, for which he served one year in Folsom. He left Pomona last Thursday, and when he arrived in Los Angeles he was recegnized by the detectives.

HOW TO BUILD A BODY.

One of the most important discoveries One of the most important discoveries of late is the application of the right kind of food to rebuild the lost substances of the body, thrown off by the active, nervous work of Americans. Careful investigation by experts in food and diatetics, has brought out the fact that albumen, which is contained in various foods, is acted upon by phos phate of potash, not such as obtained in drug stores, but such as is found in certain parts of the field grains in m minute particle, arranged in Nature's laboratory, not man's.

The part of the grains containing phosphate of potash is used in the man-facture of Grape-Nuts food, therefore the active, nervous, pushing brain worker can feed the body with food that goes directly to the rebuilding of that goes directly to the rebuilding of the broken down gray matter in the brain, solar plexus and nerve centers all over the body, with the result that the individual who refreshes and re-builds the body with proper material of this sort, obtains a definite result, which he can feel and know of and which is apparent to his friends.

A vigorous brain and nervous system is of greater importance to any business man or brain worker, than un limited quantities of money.

THE OLD WAY

We say the old way, but really it is very common one at the present time, and many dyspeptics and physicians as we'l consider the first step to take in attempting to cure indigestion is to diet, either by selecting greatly diminish the quantity usually taken, in other words, the starvation plan is sup-posed by many to be the first essential. The almost certain failure of the starva but still the moment dyspepsia makes its apvised.

All this is radically wrong. It is foolish and unscientific to recommend dieting to a man suffering from dyspepsia, because indigestion itself starves every organ, every nervo and fibre in the bedy.

What the dyspeptic wants is abundant nutrition, which means plenty of good, wholesome, well-cooked food, and something to assist the weak stomach to digest it. This is executed the purpose for which Stuart's Dyspective the purpose for which Stuart's Dyspective the purpose for which Stuart's Dyspective the suppose for which S

LIM GOON'S WIFE GOING TO ARI ZONA FOR HIM.

Latest in the Romance of a Chinese Cook and a Swedish Hand-maiden-Arrested Boy Thief the Son of a Criminal-An Instance

PASADENA, July 1.-[Regular Correspondence.] Mrs. Lim Goon has de-cided to make a trip to Arizona in search of her runaway husband. It is now settled beyond a doubt that he has gone in that direction and that ertha Meseth, the blonde Swede girl who was the star witness in Lim's cent law suit, has gone, too. Descrip tions of two people who bought tickets for Tucson of the Southern Pacific, given by the ticket seller, fit Lim and Bertha to a dot, the police say. The for Tucson of the Southern Pacific, given by the ticket seller, fit Lim and Bertha to a dot, the police say. The principal mourners are Mrs. Lim and half a dozen business men here to whom the vanishing cook owed small sums. Lim was the most thoroughly Americanized Chinaman we ever had here. In his golf suit, tan shoes, short hair and smile, he looked the personification of the summer-resort young man, and he is accused of having left us on the most upto-date American plan. His forsaken little Chinese wife has been in consultation with the missionaries today. She says she is disgraced and will always be unless she can get her Lim back. So the poor to find him and coax him to return to her forgiving arms. The latest development in the case tonight is that he took property belonging to his wife valued at $300, including her diamond ring, gold bracelet and $85 in money, when he and the giddy Bertha decided to journey to a more ardent climate.

Some of Lim Goon's creditors have desired to begin extradition proceedings against him, but the City Marshal has advised them to wait, as if they should secure the person of the trim little China boy, the collection of their claims against him would be very uncertain. Again, there is no criminal charge against him All that is known is that he is gone; but it may simply be a case of romantic coincidence, which is not an offence recognized by the Criminal Code of California.

If there is any humor in connection with what seems to be a pitiful case of desertion, the joke is at the expense of those devoted W.C.T.U. ladies who descended upon the newspaper reporters with shingle in hand and punitive gleams in their spectacles, when the papers reproduced some of the testimony in the recent Goon-Pierce law-descended upon the newspaper reporters with shingle in hand and punitive gleams in their spectacles, when the papers reproduced some of the testimony in the recent Goon-Pierce lawsuit, wherein Mrs. Pierce testified that Lim used to go on moonlight excursions, with Bertha. The newspaper men were spanked and otherwise rebuked and sent to bed for having given publicity to such an insinuation against this model Chinaman and the pink of propriety on whom he languished his yellow smiles during the trial. "Lim is one of the sweetest young fellows that ever was, and little Bertha is as good as she can be," one of the White Ribboners said. A dozen of them swept into the courtroom in an imposing phalanx and remained there during the trial, as 'a demonstration of sympathy and support for "Limmie," who was one of their particular pets. They are now standing firmly by Mrs. Goon, however, 'She had been rescued by them from vicjous surroundings when Goon married her.

He won his case hands down, and the defendant paid him $67 without appeal Perhaps this victory was too much for him. It is the opinion of his friends here that before many weeks he will have a great lump of remorse in his throat and precious little left of his lawsuit money, his wife's money and the other assets which he took with him in his abrunt denarture in the in his abrupt departure, in the of diamond rings, affections and

THE COPPER BOND THIEF It appears that James Lynes, the young thief arrested by City Marshal Reed of South Pasadena yesterday for Reed of South Pasadena yesterday for stealing copper bonds from the electric road, fooled the officers. He at first made them believe he lived in Los Angeles; but an investigation today reveals that he is a South Pasadena boy, whose father was arrested a year ago for stealing hay nd jumped his bail. No trace has been found of him since, but his son seems to have followed in the paternal footsteps. It will be difficult to convict any junk dealer on the testimony of such a young romancer.

Jury Disagrees on Alleged Violation of Liquor Law.

SANTA MONICA. July 1 .- [Regular Correspondence.] The case of Jennie Fox, charged with selling liquor rox, charged with selling liquor without a city, license, which was tried by jury before City Recorder Wells yesterday, failed to develop as much of a sensation as was expected. City Attorney Tanner conducted the prosecution, and J. C. Morgan represented the defendant. Testimony of the complaining witness, Deputy Constable Walker, and others, was heard, to the effect that the woman had sold liquor and did not have a license permitting her to do so. The defendant admitted on the stand that she was conducting a house of prostitution. Mr. Morgan called Al Carrillo and James A. Small as witnesses, and asked them if it was not a fact that liquor had been sold at the Arcadla Hotel before a license was obtained for that institution. The question was ruled out, and the two witnesses were not allowed to testify on that point. stable Walker, and others, was heard, not allowed to testify on that point.

When City Marshal Barretto was on the stand Mr. Morgan made some inquiries relative to the character of the houses on the Gamberl property, which is next to the place at Second and Railroad avenue, occupied by the defendant.

"Oh, never mind that," said Mr.
Tanner. "We will admit that the Gamberl property is used for purposes of prostitution, and that Mr. Gamberl or prostitution, and that art dambers knows it."

The defendant testified that she had formerly occupied one of the Gambers houses, and that while she staid there Gambers took all of her earnings. After an hour's deliberation the jury reported a disagreement, six for conviction and six for acquittal, and was discharged. The case is to be reset for trial.

To Rupture Sufferers.

Hoping to save rupture sufferers from torture, such as I have endured, I state my experience. I have had a louble rupture for thirty years, have worn the Marsh, Sherman, Bartlett, Pomeroy and Triumph Trusses; used almost every kind of Truss known to the druggist; have taken numerous treatments and had "cures guaranteed" by physicians and specialists; in short, have tried almost every treatment under the sun; have spent thousands of dollars in search of cure, even going so far as to take fifty injections from two physicians in Los Angeles. This I feel is the worst thing I could have done after this injection treatment; I was indeed a lost man, and felt they had only brought me nearer the grave.

Sufferer, you may be sure that after spending from three to five thousand-dollars and thirty years of torture I had no faith in any one and no hope of ever being cured or even relieved.

For a number of years I have been interested in gold mines, and knew my partner to be a sufferer from double rupture, as well as myself. Some time ago this partner, even though working hard in our mines, was entirely cured by Prof. Joseph Fandrey, European Specialist in Rupture Curing, No. 642 5 South Main street, our city.

This gave me a slight hope that I might be able to get a little relief (my case I knew to be incurable,) When the Professor examined me he shrugged his shoulders and said: "You are the king of rupture sufferers, and cure I cannot today promise you, but I can give you relief and comfort." This was the glorious news to me, and within two weeks I was able to travel and oversee my business, and had such relef and comfort as I had not known in thirty years before.

Today, judging from my feelings. I believe I am almost cured, and shall soon be able to give the Professor a voluntary testimonial of my entire cure. Since I have been under Prof. Fandrey's treatment I have had opportunity to talk with a number who have been cured, and learned of hundreds of others, and know that Los Angeles should be proud of a specialist who is actually curing rupture and saving so many from torture. Any sufferer wishing further information on this subject call or address

Less than three months ago, the First Congregational Church undertook a movement for the payment of a mortgage amounting to $11,000. The entire amount was announced as subscribed a few days ago. Yesterday, the mortgage was released, and there is money in hand to meet every outstanding warrant. During the pastorate of Dr. Day, of four and one-half years, over 500 members have been added to the church, and a debt of $18,500 has been paid, in addition to keeping up all running expenses. Regular prices. We have not bought a single pair of cheap shoes for this sale. All are from our regular high grade stock, mostly in full lines. When we say a shoe is worth $3.50, the experience of 20 years in the making, buying and selling of shoes has been used to decide the point. It isn't a shoe made to look like a $3.50 shoe. It IS worth $3.50 in materials, make, fit, style, comfort. Today we are selling that shoe for $2.50.

Our object is to sell the Spring Street Stock just as rapidly as such quality and prices will do it. This coming week should witness some active buying.

XVIIITH YEAR.

MISS DADE STEGEMAN OF CHICAGO.

I tried every remedy advertised for the curse of dyspepsia without the least benefit. At last I got a bottle of Pe-ru-na. I confess I had no faith in it, as I had been, so often disappointed; but it as I had been, so often disappointed; but it as I had been, so often disappointed; but it is use, and, after using a dozen bottles, I was a well woman. I can eat anything without the least distress, sleep well, and, in the same condition I was, on the living skeleton I was, I am now a healthy, fleshy woman. This was in the same condition I was. The doctors here said there was no curse the living skeleton I was, I am isse, and I have continued well ever since. I have not been without your remedy in the house since my recovery. I advise all sufferers to do as I did and be cured.

Although catarrh of the stomach is a very distressing aliment, yet it is doubtful it is the cause of as much suffering as pelvic catarrh. Pelvic catarrh is commonly known as female disease. It means simply catarrh of the actuarrh. Pelvic catarrh is commonly known from any women complain. Doctors often fall to cure it. Pe-ru-na always effects a permanent cure.

women like the following. Tried the doctors and failed; tried Pe-ru-na and was cured:

Mrs. Alice Adams, Fairchance, Pa., says:

"I suffered five years of untold agony. I tried all the doctors I could hear of, and all the good they done me was to make a large bill. I have taken eighteen bottles of Pe-ru-na. I have tested its merits; I know its viriues. I can recommend it to the world. It has cured me; why should I not praise it to all? My friends look at me with astonishment. They want to know what has made such a remarkable change in my looks. I tell them I used Pe-ru-na and followed Dr. S. B. Hartman's instructions."

Martha E. Fowler, Salisbury, Md., says: "I don't know how to thank you, I am so much better in my side. I think I have given your medicine a fair trial, and I have recommended it to everybody I saw needed it, and every one says they nover used such medicine. I have been out nursing and in every case that I can I recommended your treatment. Ju at last Saturday I recommended your treatment to a person that was in the same condition I was. The doctors here said there was no cure for it, but I am ready to tell any-body that I am entirely cured." Catarrh of the pelvic organs is sure to produce the "pain in the side," of which so many women complain. Doctors often fall to cure it. Pe-ru-na always effects a permanent cure.

by no means what had been expected, but they fairly flew in the first part, and when they came to the stretch May Hempstead had nothing left to finish with, and the strong wind in their faces was too much for the big filly. The first break was not a good one, but at the second they got away, with Admiration in front. May Hempstead soon had a little the better of it, and, as they passed the first furlong mark in 0:11 4-5, she was a head to the good. The pace was hot to the quarter pole, which was reached in 0:23 1-5, and then May Hempstead had a neck the best of it. The pair had a strong wind behind them, and they sailed along to the half head and head.

Before Turner knew it the brown filly was a length to the good. As they rounded the mark at the beginning of the upper turn, Admiration was a length and a half in front, in 0:47, remarkably fast time. The five-furlong mark was reached and passed in 0:59 2-5, and the six furlongs in 1:12 4-5; with no appreciable change in positions.

Clawson was sitting like a statue on Admiration, while Turner was urging May Hempstead with whip and steel, as they straightened out for home. It was a useless attempt, for the further they went the easier Admiration seemed to go, and she passed the judges' stand two lengths to the good, amid the cheers of the crowd.

The other event of the day was the Advance stakes at a mile and three-quarters, in which Ben Holliday, was the favorite. Thomas cat, however, in a driving finish, won, with the favorite in the place. Results:

London Field Comments Upon Its [A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.]

LONDON, July 1.-[By Atlantic Cable.] The Field, commenting upon what it calls the "unfairness of the conditions of the cup race challenger,

"The Shamrock is of a fifty-year-old type of bottom, with a deep fin keel, heavily loaded with lead. Everything clase is mere conjecture. Doubtless she will easily beat the Brittania, but that will not prove that she is even as good as the Defender. "What Britishers want to see is American yachts crossing the Atlantic and challenging for the Royal Victoria Gold Cup, now held by the Pow, but the theory is that if an American yacht won the cup, it would never be recovered."

ON THE DIAMOND.] THIS IS HARVARD'S YEAR

SONS OF OLD ELI DEFEATED BY THE CAMBRIDGE MEN.

One of the Closest and Most Excit ing Games in the History of Col-lege Baseball-National League Games-California Diamond.

NEW YORK, July 1.—Harvard de-eated Yale this afternoon, 13 to 10, and won the championship, in one of the closest and most exciting contests in the history of college baseball. Harvard's was a decisive victory, and only earned after a grand uphill fight Yale was outplayed at every point of the game. Her men were outbatted two to one, but while Robertson al lowed hits, Fitz and Morse gave bases on balls, which were responsible for most of the Yale's runs.

In fielding there was only one tea in it and that was Harvard. was directly responsible for Harvard's two runs in the eighth, after Yale had secured what seemed to be a winning lead. Two errors were made by Yale in the ninth, when Harvard got her ful powers of endurance displayed by Queen Victoria, enabling her to bear the fatigue of such an afternoon necessarily inflicted on anybody of such an advanced age. The heat was in-

in the ninth, when Harvard got her three runs, but they had hardly any bearing on the result, as Harvard batted strongly in this inning. The attendance was 4000.

Harvard's victorious crews were on hand, and they whooped it up for the team, and then the crowd whooped it up for the team, and then the the crowd whooped it up for the team, and then the the team of the head of the team and capt. Higginson of the crew were carried around the field by the crowd singing: "This is Harvard's year." The score:

Harvard, 13; hits, 15; errors, 1.

Yale, 10; hits, 8; errors, 7.

LADY "RANDY'S" YELLOW JOUR-

PRICE 5 CENTS

While the newspapers are generally full of praise for Lady Randolph Churchill's Anglo-Saxon Review, the Daily Chronicle eyes it askance and says: "Notwithstanding the gorgeous binding, it is nothing but a colorable imitation of the yellow book, with the same writers, the same makeup and the same kind of contents."

The Times says: "Lady Randolph has planned her quarterly with daring and originality and has carried it out with remarkable success."

TOO MUCH GIRL.

The birth of a third daughter to the Czar and Czarina is regarded as an event of great political importance, because a strong party in Russia was only awaiting the event to resume its mischievous intrigues against the hated princess of Anglo-German blood. The influence of the Empress Dowager, whose relations with her daughter-inlaw are not of the most cordial description, is expected to increase.

A Rock in His Stomheh for Seven-

Extraordinary interest was taken in the sale of the Marlborough gems at Christie's Thursday, as cabled to the Associated Press at the time. Three of the most costly cameos went to dealers, viz: a head deified, of Augustus, for £2550; a Claudius Caesar, £3750, and a pair of imperial heads, £3300. Mr. Talbot, who is understood to have been buying for the Boston Museum, secured a number of famous intaglios and cameos, including the renowned cameo representing the hymenal procession of Eros and Psyche, for which he had to pay £2000. The sale, as already cabled, realized £34,760, or within £365 of what David Brownlee paid for the entire collection. [Ontario (Or.) Mattock:] Two weeks ago J. S. Millikin lay at his home on the Owyhee, in what was pronounced the last stages of pneumonia, and was given up by his family and attending physician to die. But nature came to his relief and also revealed the cadise of his illness. Abcesses had been forming in his lungs, and he had frequent spells of coughing, when he would expel great quantities of pus and blood. In his last and most violent coughing spell he raised from his lungs a piece of rock in the shape of a triangular prism, either side of the angle of which will measure about half an inch. When he felt it in his mouth he thought it igo J. S. Millikin lay at his home on Senator Hanna is attracting much Sepator Hanna is attracting much attention in the London papers. The "American king-maker" is what the Daily Chronicle styles him. In regard to Presidential prospects, the Senator said: "If you wait a year I shall, perhaps, be able to tell you who will be the next President. That is about all 'most anybody could say. But as to Admiral Dewey, why, I do not suppose he is likely to walk on the carpet."

The papers publish with all seriousness a story of Senator Hanna's visit to the House of Commons Tuesday. He was taken to the house by Henry White, secretary of the United States embasy, and after listening to the open speeches of the debate, the Senator is reported to have said:

"How much will a vote on this bill be worth?"

The St. James Gazette impertinently comments on this Tersion of the Senator's visit to the Commons, saying he was "merely' applying the standard of Washington to Westminster," adding, "He will be understood by those familiar with the scandais of Congress that he put the question quite seriously,"

JOSEPH'S, JOSEPH'S, JOSEPH'S.

Was it hot? Well, I guess yes. You would have thought so if you had been around our stove last week; we thought it was about 150 deg. in the shade. They kept us hustling; it was so warm that prices melted down to almost nothing; the ice man wasn't in it. Some dealers are crying about the advance in furniture; but we are selling at the same old price; we got in a dandy lot of good second-hand goods last week; we get in another dandy lot Monday; fine cherry folding bed and hair mattress nice cherry chiffonier, mirror on top, worth rocker, upholstered, worth $12; for $4; a order, for $20, worth $40; a nice large wardrobe for $4.50; in bedroom suits we are right in it from a $7.50 suit, good enough French plate mirror, for $15; we have more of those $4 oak extension tables; some good $1: some cotton-top mattresses at $1.50; some good feather pillows, $1.50 a pair; we got in a new line of mattings; see our winon carpets and ingrain rugs last week; we saved our customers some money; our 50c other fellows say about us; come and see for yourself. We can guess the rest; don't perspire too much next week; keep cool. Buy some ice; then see JOSEPH'S, them not to offend in other respects those sensibilities which are so delicate concerning fisticuffs. If course, I found page after page devoted to advertisements showing women in corsets, underwear and hosiery. I submit that a patronage so dainty-souled that it cannot tolerate an allusion to a muscular contest ought to be fastidious enough to make objection, at least, to the suggestive engravings with which the same magazines are filled."

A WASHINGTON SENSATION. The Wife of a Foreign Minister Stenls Doylies.

Stents Doylies.

[Chicago Record:] The upper crust of Washington society is just now agitated by a little sensation. Last winter several women who gave fine dinners and luncheons missed doylies. Some of them were of expensive embroidery, others of rich lace, and, while they are little, useless ornaments, a set represents a good deal of money, and to lose one of a set is to make the others practically useless, as everybody knows. It is common at state dinners to call in caterers, who provide the table attendants, and many a serious consultation took place between deathonable caterers and hospitable woous consultation took place fashionable caterers and hospita

Three or four months passed by. The incident was almost forgotten, when a matronly woman, who declined to give her name, called at the residence of the Vice-President, several members of the Cabinet and diplomatic corps and at private houses where the upper cult are frequently entertained, and inquired if the mistress of the house had missed any of her doylies last winter; if so, would she kindly get the pattern. When a sample was brought the mysterious visitor retired into a corner, with an apology, and pretty soon handed back the sample with the missing piece of lace or embroidery. In this way nearly all of the missing doyles have been returned without any further explanation, although the general understanding is that their recovery is due to the confessional of the Catholic church.

ELECTING A POPE.

and Follow the Election - The Beautiful Spectacle of the Coronation-A Triumphal Pageant.

[Fortnightly Review:] Since Stephen III., A. D. 769, the popes have been invariably chosen from among the car-dinals, except under very peculiar cirinvariably chosen from among the cardinals, except under very peculiar circumstances. The following popes have been elected without having previously received the purple, and were either bishops or priests at the time they ascended the chair of Peter: Gregory V, 996; Slyvester II, 999; Clement II, 1046; Damascus II, 1048; St. Leo I, 1049; Victor II, 1055; Nicholas II, 1058; Alexander II, 1061; Calixtus II, 1119; Eugenius IV, 1145; Urban IV, 1261; Blessed Gregory, 1271; St. Celestin V. 1294; Clement V, 1305; Urban V, 1362; Urban VI, 1378.

The three orders of cardinals—bishops, priests and deacons—have been likened to the three orders of the celestial hierarchy, the Seraphim, Cherubiam and Thrones. Each cardinal is granted a church in or about Rome, distinguished either for the relics it contains, or as being erected over the scene of some conspicuous martyrdom. The Sacred College at present, when complete, consists of seventy members—six cardinal bishops, fifty cardinal priests and fourteen cardinal deacons. The newly created cardinal receives, as a sort of life gift, one of the aforesaid principal Romani churches, whose altars he is obliged to keep in repair and it is also a rule that during his term of office his hat and coat-of-arms must be hung up over the principal entrance The cardinal, in taking possession of this church, adds its name to his title.

The cardinals are elected in what is termed a consistory or meeting of the Sacred College, of which there are two kinds-private and public. At the secret one none but the Pope and their eminences are present. On the contrary, in the public consistory, when the cardinals receive their insignia of office—that is to say, the scarlet beretta, calotta, etc.—the foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, the Roman aristocracy and strangers, of distinction are allowed to attend the strikingly picturesque ceremony.

aristocracy and strangers of distinetion are allowed to attend the strikingly picturesque ceremony.

The ordinary dress of a cardinal consists of a long frock buttoned down the front with many little red buttons, and a light cloak, cape and train of vivid scarlet silk. The majority of writers are of opinion that the choice of this color is derived from the fact that it was worn in classical times by the Roman Senators, of whom the cardinals are the successors. It has, however, a mystical significance, being the color of blood (or martyrdom.) and is intended to remind their eminences that they are expected to die, if necessary, in the defense of the faith. The first mention of the use of this color will be found in Cardinal Ostian's works, in which he informs us that it was universally worn by the Sacred College in the previous year to the one in which the book was written—
i. e., 1274.

was universally worn by the Sacted College in the previous year to the one in which the book was written—
i. e., 1274.

At present the usual hat worn by a cardinal is the black three-cornered beaver hat common to all priests on the continent, but having a scarlet ribbon around it and gold cords and tassels. The baretta is a small, three-cornered cap, made like that which every Catholic priest wears when in church and not officiating at the altar; it is, however, scarlet instead of black. The calotta is merely a little scarlet skull cap. Alexander III, in 1178, at the council of the Lanteran, definitely settled that cardinals should exclusively vote at a papal election. The number of cardinals, however, at this time had not been determined, nor was it for a long time afterward; for we find Boniface VIII (1012) elected by a conclave consisting of only eighteen cardinals; Boniface IX (1389) by thirteen. Gregory XII, at the council of Lyons, in 1274, ordained that the papal elections should absolutely take place in a council or conclave expressly arranged for the purpose. Before this time the Sacred College had assembled for the papal election sometimes in St. Peter's, at St. John of Lanteran, or even at the Minerva. During the past three centuries, and especially the first half of the present, many popes have been elected at the Quirinal.

The conclave should by rights assemble as soon as possible after the Pope's burial, even in the afternoon of the same day, as has been frequently for case. The first formally-organized ornelawe was convoked at Viterbo in 1270, and lasted longer than any other on record, and resulted in the election of Gregory X. It appears that the cardinals who were in Viterbo at the time of the death of Clement IV, and who composed the conclave, could not arrive at a conclusion as to who was to succeed him. After sitting for meny months, they were about to pack up and return to Rome, when St. Bonaventura, persuaded the Viterbans to surround the palace so as to prevent who composed the conclave, could not arrive at a conclusion as to who was to succeed him. After sitting for meny months, they were about to pack up and return to Rome, when St. Bonaventura, persuaded the Viterbans to surround the palace so as to prevent their leaving it, a proposal which was halled with glee by the Leople, who intimated to the cardinals that they should remain shut up where they were until they had accomplished their mission. However, even this expedient did not hasten matters, and two years elapsed before the prelates could make an end of their session, they remaining virtually prisoners all the time.

The cardinals are allowed to bring with them a supply of wines, cordials and sweetmeats, but as there are three doctors provided, and shut up with them, they are requested not to introduce any medicines, as a perfectly well-organized pharmacy is at their service. This regulation was evidently intended to prevent the least suspicion of foul play. Every morning their eminences have a cup of coffee or of chocolate and a small loaf of bread brought into their study or bedroom by a servant, accompanied by another attendant, who is expected to report to the cardinal chamberlain if any conversation or any accident, such as sickness, has occurred.

The cardinal is not expected to speak with the servants unless obliged to do so. At noon their eminences breakfast, and at 7 oclock they have their supper. These meals are substantial but frugal and consist of soup, fish, meat, poultry and dessert, but no sweet dishes are served. On the day of entering the conclave the cardinals are permitted to sub together in small parties in one another's rooms for the last time.

At midnight the bell rings, and such persons as have no business to remain in the conclave, and who are there only as visitors or gossips, have to clock in the morning the bell tolls again, and at 3 it rings for the third and last time, and the gates are finally closed until the new Pope is elected.

On the occasion of the conclave which elevated standing, not kneeling, as in the case of emperors and kings, the cardinal being on the steps nearest the altar. This takes place in the presence of the entire pontifical court, the ambassadors and aristocracy, as well as of a multitude which fills not only the vast basilica, but also the enormous plazza without, where people have been stationed from a very early hour in order to receive the pontifical blessing from the principal balcony. The enthronization follows, during which the "Te Deum" is sung, and the whole stupendous function used to conclude with a solemn procession, either on muleback or else in the magnificent pontifical state carriages to the Lateran Basilica, which, being the cathedral of the eternal city, the new pontifit took formal possession of as bishop of Rome.

Triumphal arches spanned the streets took formal possession of as bishop of Rome.

Triumphal arches spanned the streets at intervals and every palace 'and every house was draped with costly drapery, rich silks and flowers.

At the Lateran the archbishop of that basilica presents the Pope with the keys of St. Peter on a golden salver, one golden and the other silver. The new Pope now receives the homage of the cardinals, archishops, bishops, abbots and clergy, and, after giving the papal benediction from the balcony over the church door, he returns in the same state to the Vatican, where a great banquet is given which is attended by the foreign ambassadors, the Pope, however, dining by himself, under a canopy of state. The whole city of Rome formerly on these occasions was brilliantly illuminated, and even the famous girandola was fired off from the summit of the castle of St. Angelo, Bands of music paraded the streets, and until a late hour. Rome presented a most animated, brilliant and picturesque scene, such as, it is much to be feared, will never be seen again, for it is questionable, even if a reconciliation, between the papacy and the Italian government ever takes place, that these grand old ceremonies can be revived in their former completeness, the spirit of a utilitarian age being opposed to such gorgeous manifestations of ecclesiastical pomp.

What pen can describe the splendor of this procession, in the good old times, when the Pope, robed in cloth of gold, and wearing his tiara, and riding his garly-caparisoned mule under a canopy upheld by the six principal princes of Rome, and followed by the whole Sacred College, on muleback, each cardinal wearing his scarlet, silk cana magna and hat, and escorted by the most brillint cortege conceivable, passed through the gayly-decorated streets of Rome, wound by the Coliseum to the wonderful old basilica which Leo. XIII has chosen for his place of sepulcher?

PARK LAWLESSNESS.

Order Applies to Tuesday sumed-City Engineer's Annual

If the attempt be made to carry ou ranged for today at Agricultural Park there will be a police raid at that place the like of which has never before been known in police annals in this city. The order to enforce the law against such violations has been pro-mulgated by the Mayor. The Chief of Police has been instructed to prevent what the gamblers, macs, pimps and others of their kind intended for today and Tuesday if it takes the whole police force to do it, and the Mayor declares there are no strings to that order. If the order be obeyed bear more resemblance to a camp meeting than to a resort for law bear more resemblance to a camp meeting than to a resort for law breakers, and the people of that part of the city will have won their fight against the practices of which they have so often complained.

The promulgation of this order resulted from a long consultation between the Mayor and Chief Glass in the Mayor's office yesterday morning. Neither of them desired a repetition of the Sycamore Grove incident, and even had there been a disposition to wink at this last Sunday of coursing that was not possible, considering that the whole public was watching to see what would be done. The present trouble in the Police Commission was caused by an effort on the part of property-owners to suppress lawlessness near their homes and to have the law enforced instantly and not at the convenience of convicted law breakers.

convenience of convicted law breakers.

In order to ascertain just what the law is and just how the police could proceed to enforce it, the Mayor and Chief of Police went to the office of the City Attorney and asked him whether coursing was a violation of the law. The attorney explained that the mere act of coursing was not prohibited by either ordinance or statute but he reminded them that F. D. Black had been convicted in the courts on a charge of cruelty to animals, the basis of which charge was that Black had conducted coursing. The conviction was a judicial declaration that coursing is cruelty to animals, and therefore a violation of statute, to enforce which is the sworn duty of every policeman in the State. As to pool-selling, the City Attorney explained that there is an ordinance which permits book-making and pool-selling at the track during race mest.

Committee the Auditor and Treasurer were directed to transfer the following amounts from the tax fund of 1899-190° to the various other funds: Elysian Park, $700; Westlake Park, $1000; fire department, $4000; salary fund, $10.000; cash fund, $10.000 lighting fund, $1600; sprinkling fund, $2000. Signed the Ordinance.

Mayor Eaton yesterday approved the final ordinance adopted by the Council the day before, calling the special ings, but as there is now no race meeting in progress there and as coursing cannot be considered racing under the ordinance, pool-selling and book-making there at this time are contrary to law. The Mayor asked many questions and was informed that there should be no difficulty in securing convictions if arrests were made when the violators were in the act of breaking the law. He told the Mayor, who seemed to be a little foggy on law, that a policeman had as much right to make such arrests as he would have to arrest a highwayman whom he caught in a hold-up. The annexation of the park to the city was also mentioned, and on this point, the City Attorney made it clear that the annexation was in every way regular and is fully complete, notwithstanding the Chief's legal opinion to the contrary. Under the circumstances the Mayor could do nothing else than to direct Chief Glass to enforce the law. When asked about the matter last night the Mayor said:

"There will be no coursing at Agricultural Park tomorrow, or if there is, every man who has anything to do with it will be arrested. We will have policemen there today, and if we fill the City Jail with prisoners we will stop the coursing. If nickel-in-the-slot machines are found in operation there, they will be selzed and taken to the Police Station. The order has been issued to the Chief of Police to enforce the law to the letter, if it takes the entire police force to do it. This order not only applies to tomorrow, but to the Fourth of July as well. Coursing has been declared to be a violation of law in that it is cruelty to animals, and the law will be strictly enforced. No pools will be sold there tomorrow or Tuesday if we have to take the men out of the pool boxes as fast as they make sales of tickets."

This order to the police will be disappointing to a large number of the class which usually frequents the park on Sunday afternoons. The word had been passed among the gamblers, pimps and others of that class that as coursing was to stop on Tuesday, it was intended Manager Morford of the Free Labor Bureau, which is supported jointly by the city and the county, has filed his report for June in the office of the City Clerk. It shows that during that month orders were received for 43 aborers and employment was secured for 417 workingmen.

order to complete the work on Thrid-street tunnel as soon as possible, the contractors have put on a possible, the contractors have put on a night force in addition to their regular day shift, and for weeks to come the work will be done night and day. The work at the eastern end of the tunnel will be duplicated at the western end and the excavations for the tunnel proper will begin in a few days. The sooner the contractors finish the work the more profit they will make out of the job, which accounts for the double crews.

Within the Allowance

The annual report of the park department will show that the expendipartment will show that the expenditures were within the allowances made for the department at the last annual apportionment of funds. The amount allowed the department was $52 030, and the expenditures amounted to $51,621.56 leaving a balance of $408.44.

City Assessor Ward has filed in the office of the City Clerk a list of the property-owners who have failed to and that there would be a "wide open" time, with everything running full blast and no restraint as to any sport. In order to induce a large attendance Black had announced that no admission fee would be charged, and that the park was open to all comers. He is said to have declared yesterday that he would attempt to carry out his programme in spite of the opposition of the property-owners, and last night he had an illuminated car and a brass band out advertising his "free, wide-open" farewell appearance as a defiant law-breaker with a pan. property-owners who have failed to pay their personal property taxes, showing the amounts due. In each case the Assessor has made an arbitrary assessment which goes to the Board of Equalization for such action as that body may desire to take. Under the law it is possible for the board to make the assessment ten times the original amount on account of the non-payment of taxes. The collections of personal property taxes this year has been much larger than ever before and exceeds last year's collections by nearly $8000.

Property-owners on Ninth street be-tween Main and San Pedro streets have filed with the City Clerk a protest uditor's Report for the End or the against the proposed curbing of that street as provided for in an ordinance of intention recently adopted. They assert that the cost of the improvement would be greater than any benefits that could come from it.

The City Auditor yesterday completed a statement showing the condition of the various standing funds of the city at the end of the fiscal year. This report does not take into consideration the transfers ordered yesterday. None of the funds show deficits. Those with balances are as follows, those not mentioned being exactly even: Cash, $47.07; salary, 50 cents; fire department, $2.20; common school, $20,287.46; library, $426.77; Westlake Park, $20.15; Elysian Park, $2.68; street lighting, $4.60; street sprinkling, $352.07; redemption, $1100.41; boiler permit, $87.85; police many $462.38; does fund, $31; emergency fund, $104.79. The balance of cash under the control of the City Treasurer is $413.318.76. Hand-sweeping Resumed. The work of sweeping the streets he business center of the city by hand was resumed yesterday morning by a of the sweepings are deposited in

Mr. Wright placed Mr. Brown in nomination, and Superintendent Strine nominated Mr. Morgan of Covina. The rominated Mr. Morgan of Covina. The r Attorney will send to the Council an opinion, in which he will state that the petition should be denied. According to him, one of the things of which the city of Los Angeles is now complaining is the fact that divers persons and corporations are taking water north of the city, which is properly a part of the waters of the Los Angeles River, and it would be inconsistent for the city under such circumstances to permit any one else to take water out of the river bed to the detriment of the riparlan owners. the detriment of the riparian owners south of the city, and such conduct might involve the city in litigation with the riparian owners.

BURNING THE FLAG.

Sebastopol's Secession and Its Strange Punishment.

Strange Punishment.

[Chicago Times-Herald:] The story was told me years ago floating by Dead Man's Slough one hot afternoon in June. The slough is a bayou of the Upper Mississippi. Fishermen sometimes find corpses there attached to their lines.

"See," said Bristow, the story-teller, pointing to a bay on the western shore of the river. "Sebastopol was there once-a bloody town that went out in the night. How do I know who laid it out, or what became of those who were there? Perhaps the riverswallowed it up, perhaps the lightning blasted it out. I wasn't there. But right where the water's breaking on the bank now the town stood, and because the bluffs and the hills bound it in they call it Sebastopol, and the sugar and wheat boats come and go, and the women and children kidded about the streets, and the men waited for the town to make 'em all millionaires. All towns in that Sioux and Winnebago country were gold mines in those days—days when everybody had a dream.

"A boat throws out her lines one night and ties up, and when the captain comes ashore and the best of the town was going down his gully he tells as how the South is for secession and going to quit the North. He says in the cotton fields men were working with guns by their sides, and that there was a new flag, one with stars and bars, what was put up over the other with Stars and Stripes. And it was all about the nigger. Sebastopol didn't care for niggers; there wasn't one in the town, and those what come up on the boats stayed on 'em when at Sebastopol. One what come ashore they put at a foot of a hill with the oak and the elm so thick you couldn't see the top, and they started him on the climb up with the hounds after him. And it was music to the ears below, when the hounds reached him and the yell of his despair was shut off with the yelp of the dogs. Did heget away? Nobody went to see. He didn't come back, but the dogs did. "Fifteen hundred miles away from Washington Sebastopol learns of secession and decides it'll go out of the Union, too, and one a vote there was seventy-one men for destroying the town flag, what was a proper banner of Stripes and Stars. There was one man, a Vermonter, whose name was Jessup, who voted for the flag, and he got his notice that night to follow the nigger over the hills, only they didn't set the dogs after him. He takes his rifle and he goes to the top of the highest bluff what overlooks behasted in come next. Somebody said as now the South was going to take everything along the river from N'Orleans to St. Anthony, and as how Jeff Davis would be king. Some of the Sebastopol peo-ple knew him, because he'd been at Fort Prairie du Chien when he was in Anthony, and as now Jell Davis would be king. Some of the Sebastopol people knew him, because he'd been at Fort Prairie du Chien when he was in the regular army.

"While they were all speculating, somebody looks up to the top of the hill where old Jessup had gone, and there they sees the Stars and Stripes waving from a pole, and Jessup standing by it, leaning on his gun and looking down. Nobody knew how he got the flag—suppose he must have had it in his kit for a long time. It wasn't a big flag, but big enough for all Sebastopol to see it and get redhot mad. The men goes for their guns, the women got inside their houses, and there's going to be trouble sure. There was just one way to get up to Jessup, and that was a straight climb through the brush to where he was. A couple of men took a shot at him from the town, but he never moved, and the first fellow that got anywhere near him, Jessup gave him warning and shot him dead. That stopped the offhers, and they went to speculating. They speculated all day and night, and for several days, but Jessup and the flag didn't move until they got ready to.

"When they did go nobody saw, and the next word that comes to Sebastopol was that the regulars at Fort Snelling had been notified of what the town had done, and there was going to be trouble. Sebastopol laughed, but like a woman that has the lung trouble not bad, but coming slow and gradual, the town fades away. This family goes and that one, the docks break away, the flood comes, the houses tumble in, the timber wolves get nearer; there's a frechet. Lake Pepin backs up, and one morning there ain't anything where Sebastopol was but sand and wood grass and some birds end squirrels. Of course, God does some queer things, and I don't never meddle with His business. It's enough for me to know that He's around, sawing wood, but I just have kept a-thinking ever since I knew about that flag that somehow what Sebastopol didn't agree with the Almighty, and he put out His hand and laid it upon the town, and that was enough."

Burglar Escapes from Court.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1.—Christopher Merkle, ex-convict and convicted burglar, today escaped from Judge Lawlor's courtroom where he had been taken by the balliff for sentence. When the prisoners were brought into court, Merkle was one of the first to be unchained. He stepped into the dock, and when the deputy sheriffs were not looking, slipped out at the further end and quietly walked out of the courtroom into the juryroom. From there he made his way to the street and has not yet been captured.

A TRAGIC PICTURE.

Pathetic Attachment of Capt. Wat kins for His Favorite Ship.

[New York Sun:] Letters received n New York from old friends of Capt. Frederick Watkins in Falmouth, indiate that the nervous tension to which has been subjected since the stranding of the Paris is telling on the vetage according.

ing of the Paris is teining on the vec-eran severely.

The disaster came as a bitter stroke, near the close of a seafaring existence of almost half a century, and those in Falmouth who have visited Lowland Point and watched the vain efforts to float the liner have also noted the haggard face of her commander.

He is still on board the stranded vessel.

He is still on board the stranded vessel.

The wrinkles in the gentle face have grown deeper, they write, and there is a look of mental torture about the kindblue eyes that shows unmistakably how the old commander is suffering over the loss of his command.

The Parls was his favorite. He had stuck to her after she became an American vessel, had repudiated his native land and espoused the American cause to retain her command, had followed her through the war with Spain and, as navigating officer, had piloted her through many a narrow channel in the Great Antilles.

To lay her bones on the rocks of Lowland Point is enough to break the captain's heart.

It is considered little wonder that he is grief stricken, and those who know him best are inclined to believe, that when the last hope of floating the Parls dies, Capt. Watkins will collapse.

The captain can probably number more prominent men and women among his personal acquaintances than the commander of any other liner out of this port. Since the stranding of the Parls he has been fairly inundated with letters of sympathy, and many of them bear the armorial bearings of noble houses.

To him, too, the Inman, and after—ble houses.

To him, too, the Inman, and afterward the American line, owes much of its fame. He was in command of the old Chicago when that vessel made its fastest passages and afterward in the Berlin he led the Inman fleet.

He was the first commander of the New York, then known as the City of Paris was placed on the route he was given command as the commodore of the line.

given command as the commodore of the line.

Her machinery worked smoothly from the first, and Capt. Watkins showed as much pleasure as a boy would over a new toy. He grew to love this graceful vessel and vowed to finish his sea service on board.

The Paris speedily developed a speed superior to the New York, and under the captain won the record between New York and Southampton. This record she held until the advent of the St. Louis and St. Paul.

He would probably have remained commodore of the fleet had not the Paris and New York, with abbreviated names, been placed under the American flag early in 1893. The Paris raised the Stars and Stripes as an American liner in March of that year, and Capt. Watkins was transferred to his old command—the Berlin.

So soon as possible he secured American citizenship papers and an American master's certificate. Then he resumed command, to be again relieved when the Paris was turned over to the government as an auxiliary cruiser. To remain with the ship he accepted the place of navigating officer and followed her fortunes through the war. Again he was placed in command when the vessel, thoroughly overhauled, was placed in the American line service once more.

He is said to have expressed the determinant of the service once more.

once more.

He is said to have expressed the determination to remain on board the Paris so long as there is the least hope of floating the ship.

General King Under Fire.

General King Under Fire.

[Manila Freedom:] Perhaps one of the most interesting and romantic figures in the Eighth Army Corps is Brig.-Gen. Charles King. Interesting because of his great popularity in the States as a novelist, romantic because he is the adored of scores of maids as the creator of such "perfectly lovely" blue-coated heroes.

I have always thought that his "Warrior Gap" was a sort of an autobiography. How, then, would the hero of "Warrior Gap" conduct himself in a real battle? How? I have no doubt many a thousand enthusiastic maids have asked this question of themselves many times. Let me tell you a true little incident, then judge for yourselves.

During the heavy firing of February little incident, then judge for yourselves.

During the heavy firing of February 5 Gen. King had charge of a brigade consisting of the California, Washington and Idaho regiments. He was commanded to perform the difficult task of clearing the country adjacent to the east bank of the Pasig from Manila to the lake, a distance of twelve miles. His brave fellows commenced their work well. Storming blockhouses, rushing over marshy rice fields, penetrating almost impassible bits of jungle, they forecd the enemy back with crushing loss. Through it all rode Gen. King at the head of his command.
Participating in all the fighting, ever at the front, leading on his men, rushing ahead with them, and in the excitement of the strife, yelling and shouting with them, as they victoriously swept onward.

After capturing the town of Santa

shouting with them, as they victoriously swept onward.

After capturing the town of Santa Ana the brigade pushed on and met the rebels between the latter place and San Pedro Macati. They were gathered in great numbers upon a rise of ground and strongly intrenched. The place seemed a veritable hell. The brigade cautiously approached as skirmishers. Gen. King desired to feel his way. Suddenly cheers burst out upon the air, and a wild rush came, and the boys in blue and brown flew across the rice field and up the hill in the very mouths of the guns.

"Stop, for God's sake! It's no use! It's suicide! You can't do it, boys!" But the general's words were lost upon the men. Turning to an aide with a face half-pleased, half-annoyed, he said: "See, there goes the American soldier! All hell can't stop him." And all hell didn't, either. But the funny part of the story is that the general himself was one of the first to reach the top of the hill, and there were not so many suicides, either; that is, not on our side.

A Naughty Fox Terrier.

A Naughty Fox Terrier.

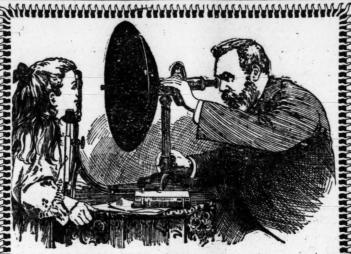

[San José Mercury:] Not long ago a very fat spaniel was introduced into the house where a fox terrier had always been the master. The latter was told, however, to behave well to the newcomer and not to bully him. So the two seemed fairly friendly and in the end got into the habit of taking short rambles together.

However, the fox terrier was evidently of a thoughtful disposition and on one occasion came across a bank or wall which was easy enough to leap off, but there was greater difficulty in returning. The fox terrier sprang down the bank and enticed his heavy companion to follow, with the result that he latter could not get back, which the former, by reason of his greater activity, was easily able to do. Now, the terrier saw his opportunity, returned home and cruelly left his companion lamenting. Never did the former seem happier or gayer than on that day when he had once more the sole run of the house, and he sulked when later on, the spaniel had been found, assisted up the wall and brought home.

Since then the fox terrier has repeatedly got the spaniel down the same place, with the usual result, and seems to glory in his mischievous, act. Whether the "fat dog" will learn to avoid temptation to such a ramble remains to be seen.

THEIR CURES

Recommend Them to All Ailing People.

The English and German Physicians Have Been Healing the Sick, Giving Strength to the Weak and Hope to the Despondent for More than a Quarter of a Century. Permanent Cures, Advice Free.

THEY CURE ALL CHRONIC DISEASES

The man is yet unborn who is great enough to master the almost limitless field of medicine and surgery. No one is more strongly convinced of this than the members of the staff of the ENGLISH AND GERMAN PHYSICIANS. Other doctors, however, have tried to do this but have met with disappointing results to themselves and often disastrous to their patients. For this reason the ENGLISH AND GERMAN PHYSICIANS determined at the very beginning of their professional careers, away back in the seventles, to limit their practise to certain lines of diseases, and to originating and perfecting cures for such allments. Each one treats diseases which they are absolutely certain they can positively cure, to stay cured forever-namely: Chronic diseases of any name or nature, including all diseases weakness of women. The ENGLISH AND GERMAN PHYSICIANS do not use specifics, electric belts or other fraudulent devices or schemes so common nowadays. Each case is treated separately and scientifically and carefully watched as the cure progresses.

All medicines are carefully prepared in their own private laboratory free of cost to patients. These celebrated specialists never dispense minerals or other dangerous drugs, nothing being used but the extracts of barks, buds, berries, gums, roots, flowers, plants and leaves.

Home of the English and German Physicians. Incorporated Under the Laws of California for $250,000.

Men or women who are suffering or embarrassed with weakness or disease should not lose sight of these facts:

Bodily affections will not get cured without help-the right kind of help. That the longer it continues the longer it will take to get cured. That the cost as well as the danger increases every day, that treatment

That electric belts, other dangerous stimulants, patent medicines or an ordinary doctor cannot possibly cure.

All Medicines Free. No charge for Consultation.

Most physicians charge from two to five dollars for advice. The English and German Physicians give it free. Most physicians either charge an exorbitant price for medicines or send their patients to a high-priced drug store, where a commission of 50 per cent. is paid to them on all their prescriptions. The English and German Physicians resort to neither of these unprofessional and unfair methods. They furnish, from their own private laboratory, all the necessary medicines, appliances, etc., without any cost to the patient whatever.

NERVOUS DECLINE.

Serious Affection Due to Weakened Nerves.

The Health of the Entire Body Depends Upon the State of the Nervous System.

Nerve weakness is the beginning of many serious diseases. Nerve weakness precedes Nervous Decline and Nervous Prostration, therefore every man and woman may readily understand the importance of guarding against a complete breaking down of the nervous system. understand the highest are weak, it affects the organs or portions of the body that are if any of your nerves are weak, it affects the nerves of the heart are weak, it affects the action of the heart; if the nerves of the stomach are weak, it causes stomach trouble, the action of the heart; if the nerves of the stomach are weak, it causes stomach trouble.

There are many conditions that result in a weakening or injury to the nervous system, and that accounts for the frequency of this baneful affliction. Men and women in all walks of life are liable to nervous decline. Sleeplessness is one of the early symptoms of nervous prostration; it is a warning that serious disease is impending. We cannot do without refreshing sleep; it is most necessary to life. When one does not get the requisite amount of sleep, the vital energies fall to recuperate, the forces are gradually expended, the bodily strength decreases. Extreme nervousness and headaches result, the memory becomes clouded and many other symptoms ensue.

Sleeplessness, impaired memory, despondency, melancholla, lack of energy, tired and worn-out feeling, impaired appetite—all these are the result of a breaking-down of the nervous system.

It is Attracting the Attention of All Scientific Men.

THE REMARKABLE INCREASE IN KIDNEY AND LIVER DISORDERS, AND THE any diseases that arise from the imperfect working of these organs, is attracting the itention of scientific medical men. Statistics prove that one person out of every ten flers from functional or organic disease of these important organs. Much suffering and misery is directly traceable to Kidney or Liver Disease. In about 50 per cent. of uses these two lesions are associated, and in the other half they occur independent of cases these two lesions are associated, and in the other half they occur independent of each other.

When we take into consideration the importance of the office performed by these or gans, we perceive the value of a renedy that insures their health and activity. It is the work of the kidneys to take from the blood the waste matter and poisons that breed disease, and discharge them from the system. When the functions of these organs is interfered with, then the blood becomes contaminated and disease results. Hudyan will strengthen the kidneys and stimulate them to perfect action.

Torpidity of the liver is the usual disturbance in this large gland. It is the beginning of more serious trouble. Hudyan, stimulates the liver to natural action, and thus the blic is directed from the blood into its natural channel, and in this manner the bowels are corrected, for bile is nature's own laxative. The stomach is relieved, and all the organs act in harmony, just as nature intended they should.

You Can Diagnose Your Own Case If You Will Observe the Following:

Figure 1 denotes headache, which may be throbbing or dull, periodical or continuous. This symptom is common to both liver and kidney disease. Figure 2 represents the eyes. In kidney lesions there is a puffiness under the eyes, or the edge of lids may be swollen slightly. The eyes themselves will appear dull. In liver trouble the eyes are dull and the whites yellowish. This yellow color may be very propunced, or slightly noticeable. Figure 3, the mouth. In both kidney and liver diseases the tongue is coated and the breath offensive. There may be sunken or hollow cheeks. As dropsy follows in the more severe forms of liver and kidney disease, the cheeks may be bloated. Figure 4 denotes the heart. The functions of this important organ is usually impaired in these affections. You will observe irregular flutterings at times (palpitation.) and sometimes pain. Be warned and provide yourself with the remedy that will cure you. Figure 5 represents the stomach. The digestion is nearly always impoired. Your appetite is poor. In kidney disease you may experience excessive thirst. You may have pash or soreness in region of stomach, or a heavy feeling that is distressing. Figure 6 denotes pain in sides ahd back.

There are other symptoms that present themselves when the work of kidneys or liver.

stomach, or a heavy teeing that is discressing, Figure o denotes pain in Fluore and also weakness in back.

There are other symptoms that present themselves when the work of kidneys or liver is interfered with. Nervousness is common to both affections. Poins in the limbs is a characteristic symptom of kidney disease. You become pale and weak in kidney disease. Your skin is usually yellow or mottled in liver disease. You may present liver spects. Costiveness may exist in both affections, but is usually more pronounced in liver spects.

It is doubtful if the deleterious effects of an excess of those effete matters in the blood, due to inactive kidneys and liver, is sufficiently appreciated by most people. Many complaints attributed to other causes are directly due to an impaired action of the kidneys and liver. Especially is this true in regard to rheumatism. Disorders of the heart, apoplexy, valvular disease and nervous prostration.

Thousands of testimonials, gratuitously given, prove that the great Hudyan will cure all kidney and liver diseases. Come to our offices and read these letters. "DR." GILLETTE'S OFFENSE. Old Degenerate Convicted Be-

"Dr." M. J. Gillette, an old man who looks as though, in his declining days, his efforts should be applied to consideration of his spiritual wel-days, his efforts should be applied to the consideration of his spiritual welfare instead of occupying the position of defendant in the Police Court on a despicable charge, was before Justice Austin yesterday for trial on a charge of indecently exposing his person.

Gillette is over 50 years old, and it is said that this is the third time that he has been tried on a similar charge, twice in this city and once in Santa Barbara. This time the offense is alleged to have been committed on May 22, in the presence of the little three-year-old daughter of E. E. Foster, in a flat on South Grand avenue, near Tenth street.

The child is in the custody of Mrs. Hunt, who occupies a flat adjoining Gillette, and when she discovered the act of the old moral degenerate she called Mr. Clark, a neighbor, and the two watched Gillette from a window until they had what they considered sufficient evidence against him. They then confronted the old man, and he attempted to explain, but Clark refused to accept the explanation and held him in custody until the arrival of the patrol wagon.

At the trial yesterday Clark and Mrs. Hunt testified positively to what they had seen, and described the actions of the defendant in detail. Gillette entered a general denial of the charge against him, and attempted to explain his actions on the ground that he was an invalid, going into elaborate details. A woman physician testified to treating Gillette, and his housekeeper stated that she was on the porch during all of the time that he was there with the little girl and had seen nothing wrong.

Policeman Baker also stated that Gillette had previously been convicted in this city of a similar offense. Another witness testified to the bad character of the defendant, and several character witnesses, both men and women, were introduced in his behalf, but Justice Austin held that the evidence against him was so strong that he had no alternative but to find him guilty. Tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock was the time fixed for passing sentence, and as the court was not satisfied with the defendant's previous ball security, he was ordered to file a new bond in the sum of $400 or deposit $250 cash. Up to last night he had not filed new bonds and was still in jail.

This is the paper he read at the recent Trans-Mississippi Congress, which many people have declared to have been the best feature of that convention.

Minimum Changed-Something for Shippers to Look Up.

The freight men in the several railroad offices are deeply interested in a big book. It is the new classification put out by the western freight men. It affects mostly goods classified as below class three. Where the traffic is most affected is in the minimums. That is to say on all goods below class three the minimum carload is raised to 30,000 pounds, from whatever it may have been before. But no freight man will be able to state off-hand that on a certain lot of goods rated below class three, the minimum is 30,000 pounds, for the reason that there are numerous exceptions. For instance acids are rated below class three, but the minimum below 30,000. The exceptions are not always in putting the minimum below 30,000. In some instances it is set higher than that figure. This matter will interest shippers even more than railroad men, for they will be obliged to learn what weight will constitute a carload before ordering their goods.

Robert C. Smith, 20 years old, was in the Police Court before Justice Morgan yesterday afternoon on a charge of cruelty to animals. Young Smith drives an oil wagon, and on Friday drives an oil wagon, and on Friday Policeman George caught him in the act of cruelly beating one of his horses. On being convicted yesterday Justice Morgan gave him a severe reprimand, fined him $10, with the alternative of spending ten days in the chain gang, and curtly informed him that the fact he is his mother's chief support saved him from more severe punishment. Young Smith paid his fine.

Telling of Cures by Dr. McLaughlin's Electric The value of a treatment is in its power to cure. When it cures the world is bound to find it out and use

There are sick people who are glad to know of a remedy which will overcome their ailments. They are glad to find something which will give them back the health and will not do it. Electricity will. Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt never fails because it gives Electricity in the right way—under a physician's direction. It has a record of 10,000 cures. Is the best and safest invigorator ever used.

LATE CURES.

Cured of Rheumatism.

DR. M. A. McLAUGHLIN—Dear Sir: In reply to yours of recent date, you will remember that at the time I purchased your Belt I came to you for advice, as my condition at that time was something dreadful. I had suifered with solation for four years, and had doctored with some of the best specialists on this Coast. but I only grew worse. I commenced the use of your Belt and after using it faithfully. I can say that I have received a permanent cure. I have been free from pain since the first week I napplied the Belt and feel very happy over the results. Thanking your for your advice, and assistance while using the Belt, I remain, yours very truly.

DR. M. A. M'LAUGHLIN: Since commencing the use of your Belt I have noticed a gradual improvement, and can today say that I am completely cured and heartier and stronger than I have been for years; in fact, I feel like a new person, and, judging from my experience with your Belt, believe it will do all you claim. I have advised several parties up here to try your Belt, and they have done so with success. Yours very truly.

Paralysis Cured.

DR. M. A. MLAUGHLIN—Dear Sir: I suffered four years from partial paralysis, poor circulation, indigestion, deranged vision and sleeplessness; in fact. I was a total wreek after trying doctors and medicines with no relief. About a month ago I purchased one of your high-grade Belts and wore it as directed. I began to improve from the first application until today I am a well man, cured of all my aliments, and recommend your Belt to all sufferers, feeling sure it will do as you say. Yours very sincerely, M. O'CONNOR, 1122 Market St., San Francisco.

DR. McLAUGHLIN'S ELECTRIC BELT

Cures when drugs fail; cures when the efforts of the best doctors fail; cures when other ways of applying Electricity fail. It has cured thousands of cases of Nervous and Vital Weakness, Rheumatism, Kidney Troubles, Stomach Troubles and all the kindred symptoms of these diseases after the failure of all other known methods. "Why?" Because it is Electricity applied by a physician in a manner taught by thirty years of experience. Experience teaches. I have had it in plenty, and you can have the benefit of it

TRY II. Call and see this famous life-giver and let me show you how simple it is and yet how wonderful is its work. You can have a free test and free advice at my office. If my Belt will help you I will tell you or, if not, I will be candid with you and advise you honestly. My reputation and success have come from fair treatment of my patients, not from deception. Therefore, let me help you or advise you how to help yourself. If you cannot call let me send you my book, "THREE CLASSES OF MEN," closely sealed, free upon request. Call or address

It is an old saying that "rats deser a sinking ship." The truth of this proverb is aptly illustrated in the facility with which some of the leading advocates of flat silver coinage, at the ratio of 16 to 1, "without waiting for the consent of any other nation," are forsaking the rotten hulk of free silverism, which lies dismantled upon the waves, ready to go down forever in the

The recent defection of Peffer of Kansas from the silver ranks is well remembered. But Peffer is not alone in this apostasy. "There are others." Wharton Barker of Philadelphia, here tofore one of the most radical of the free-silver advocates, declares that free coinage is a dead issue. Gen. A. J. Warner of Ohio another uncompromising advocate of the 16-to-1 fallacy, has come out with the declaration that imperialism and trusts are issues that transcend and take precedence of sil-Other instances of secession from the silver cause—or craze—might be cited. The Salt Lake Tribune, for instance, which clung lovingly to the coat-tails of Tearful Teller in 1896, now frankly admits that "it is idle to keep up the shouting for free silver." Even Bryan, who in 1896 was the head and front of the offending, has now very little to say about free coinage, and the little that he has to say is grudgingly and with apparent timidity. In short, the more intelligent and farsighted among the quondam advocates of free silver coinage recognize the fact that that issue is dead beyond hope of resurrection, and they are making a tremendous effort to discover some other issue to take its place. Thus far, the success achieved in this direction is neither flattering nor brilliant.

Various causes and influences have contributed to the elimination of the so-called "silver issue" from the campaign of 1900. Perhaps the most potent of these is to be found in the marvelous prosperity which has come to the entire country as a sequence of the defeat of free silverism and the triumph of sound money principles, in the national campaign of 1896. It is not necessary to remind even the casual reader that the advocates of free silver coinage predicted the direct of calamities as a result of the Republican victory in that memorable campaign. The country was to go to the dogs at a galloping pace, values were to decline, labor was to be enslaved, property confiscated, wages reduced, and evils without number were to befall the people of the United States. The sincere advocates of flat coinage-of whom there were many-stiffened their upper lips and braced themselves for the expected shock. It came-but not in the manner they expected. Instead of the long train of calamities for which they had prepared, the nation entered upon a season of prosperity almost as soon as the result of the election had been announced. Confidence took the place of to the public. If this were the case, cheerfulness replaced despondency in commercial and industrial circles, new enterprises were tirement and sought investment, the demand for labor increased, wages advanced, values in general increased instead of declining, and, in short, all of the dire forebodings of the prophets of evil failed of realization. The net result was a complete demonstration of the falsity of the theories. premises, and conclusions of the silverstatesmen. It was, and is, an obfect-lesson which cannot easily be misunderstood by any man of intelli-And thus has free silverism received a knockout blow, from which it can

Another influence which has serve in no small degree to hasten and insure the demise of the free-silver craze the rapid increase in the production gold during the past three or four Bryan declared, in 1896, that the world's production of gold was on action and that of a large number of his followers that this alleged demust continue indefinitely. We the line of fire. Who knows?

Entered at the Los Angeles Postoffice for transmission as second-class mail matter. were treated to long dissertations upon the inadequacy of the visible gold supply to serve the world's requirements as the basis of values, and we were assured that this inadequacy of the gold supply would present a more and more acute condition of danger as the world's currency needs increased and the gold supply diminished. It was a very pretty theory, and its soundness was "demonstrated" over and over again, by clever diagrams of inverted pyramids, representing the gold standard as toppling over, to the imminent peril of everybody and everything under the sun.

Here, again, the pretty theories of the silverite flatist have been knocked into the proverbial "cocked hat" by the unanswerable logic of actual results. The world's output of gold, which Bryan and his apostles declared must continue to decrease, has increased. and is increasing, with a rapidity and steadiness beyond even the dreams of the most radical of the gold-standard advocates.

In the year 1896, the world's total output of gold was $202,000,000. In the year 1900, according to the estimate of the Director of the Mint, based upon the rate of increase shown in 1898 and 1899. it will be not less than $400,000,000. The base of the gold pyramid is steadily broadening, and instead of being in danger of toppling over, the pyramid is steadily becoming more stable, by reason of the broadening and deepening of its foundations. Thus is another free-silver fallacy exploded by the cold logic of facts. At the present rate of increase in gold production, the volume of gold will oon be ample for all the monetary uses of the world, even basing the computation upon the exaggerated and untenable claims put forth by the advocates of flat silverism. This is still another nail in the free-silver coffinwhich is already so thoroughly nailed up that it will never be openedeven at the day of judgment.

FREE NEWSPAPERS.

The modern American newspaper is one of the marvels of cheapness, in this cheap age. When a newpaper is sold to those who retail it for less than the cost of the white paper upon which it is printed, as sometimes happens, it would seem that the limit of cheapness had been reached, but such, it appears, is not the case. It is said that John Wanamaker is contemplating the publication of the Philadelphia North American for free distribution in that city, the idea being that in this manner he could reach with his advertise ments all the families in the city, without having to go to the big expense of advertising in all or nearly all of the local papers. It is supposed that he could obtain sufficient other advertising, of a character which would not conflict with his own business, to make the paper a financial success.

If Mr. Wanamaker should undertake this course, he may be followed by others, until we may see every big advertiser in the United States running his own free "organ." There is something of a precedent for this in the case of a big London soap manufacturing firm which formerly purchased, at a high price, the back page of the Christmas illustrated papers in London, but for a number of years past has issued its own illustrated annual. There is, however, one important point to be considered in this connection. The publication of a newspaper does not consist merely on the making of black marks on white paper, and the selling of the finished product almost any fool might run a newspaper. A newspaper, like a man, to command success must have brains and principle. It must embody fixed policy beyond the mere effort to get rid of a large number of copies, otherwise it will have little weight among those who read it, and even the advertising columns will be of less value, especially when it is known that the paper is issued for the sole purpose of booming certain products.

Mr. Wanamaker's proposition is not by any means so much of a foregone success as some people might suppose, upon the first presentation of the idea The time is probably still far in the future when every big merchant and manufacturer will publish his own newspaper.

Should a riot break out in Rennes, there is likely to be a lot of dead or damaged reporters lying about the streets, for the little town is said to be so full of newspaper men that there is no room in which to heave a cobblestone or a brickbat without hitting one or more of them. Maybe Richard that party. This certainly ought to be Harding Davis will be able to get in

THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA SUMMER.

Unless the weather of the current month in Southern California prove to be decidedly different from the average July weather of other years, a pleasant surprise will await our thousands of visitors of the Na-tional Educational Association conven-Without a doubt, most of our guests will reach Southern California with a preconceived idea that they have come to a torrid climate. latitude of Los Angeles, and the tropical heat which prevails at some of the interior places at this time of year, naturally lend color to the inference that this portion of the Golden State is uncomfortably hot during the summer months.

Our visitors will soon discover, if the July weather of Los Angeles be any thing like normal, that they have made a radical mistake in supposing that the climate is uncomfortably torrid. They will find the July days cool and delightful with the breath of the sea, and the night temperatures so low that they will need a good, substantial covering of blankets. Instead of the dull, stagnant air that is so commonly a distressing feature of the sum mer climate of the Eastern States, they will soon discover that Southern California is a land of gentle breezes which are both cool and invigorating The air is seldom at rest, excepting at night or in the early morning, and at such times the heat is seldom oppres

It is as if Nature had carefully unique corner of the world for the comfort and the health of human beings. No portion of the globe, inhabited or uninhabited, offers better climatic conditions than are to be found in Southern California. The number of pleasant days, when one feels that it is a joy to be alive, is greater in Southern California, month by month and year by year, than in any other part of the world.

It hardly needs to be pointed out that the superb climate of Southern California is due in chief part to the Pacific Ocean, which washes its shores to the westward and southward. From this vast expanse of restless waters come the salt breezes which every day lave the heated land with the cool ness of the sea. The Pacific Ocean is a vast refrigerating appliance in summer, and a vast radiator in winter. Its temperature varies but a few degrees, winter and summer, and it thus serves as an equalizer of the atmospheric temperature. In the winter it gives off its surplus heat, making the climate of the whole coast region of Southern California mild and equable; and in the summer its cool trade-winds blow far inland, almost every day of the summer months, bringing the temperature of the land, which would otherwise be too high for comfort by reason of the excess of sunshine, down to a point where life is not only bearable, but enjoyable. Our guests of the N.E.A. cannot fail to note and appreciate these favorable conditions, nor to carry back to their eastern homes pleasant remembrances of the climate of South ern California, which is indeed "glori-

A HORRIBLE PUNISHMENT

A recent dispatch from San Quentin tells of the punishment that is to be inflicted upon a convict who recently stabbed one of the guards. He is to be confined, until his death, in one of the new "incorrigible celis." This cell or rather living tomb-is four feet wide, ten feet long and ten feet high. There is nothing in it. He will be watched day and night by guards and will not be allowed to speak. Should he venture to utter a word, he will be gagged and put in a strait-jacket. Each day he will be given a certain number of sacks to sew. He complete this work in a specified time or submit to a bread-and-water diet. He will be allowed but one meal a cay,

This is a horrible punishment, and reminds one of the tortures of the Inquisition. Death would, doubtless, be preferable to this man. It is, however, a difficult matter to decide worst of these convicts are to be managed. The Pacific Coast produces some of the toughest characters to be found in the world, the result of several generations of wild and lawless life. Many of these men are absolutely incapable of being reformed. To accomplish any good in this direction, it is necessary to take the tree while it is young and can be bent into shape. We must begin with the young child, and here is where the duty of American parents comes in. Throughout America, and especially on this Coast, there is far too much laxity in the bringing up of children, the unfortunate results of which we see in our overcrowded reform schools and jails.

Los Angeles welcomes the school ma'ams with open arms and a temperature that we are sorry for. But then, girls, you can cuddle down under blankets at night here, which is something, b'gosh, that you can't do back East at this time of the year.

By the way, did you notice that at last Harvard has won a boat race? Rah! Rah! Rah! Zip! Zip! Boom Ah! Boom! R-r-r-ippity - r-r-r-i-p! R-r-r-r-ippity-r-r-r-i-p! Rip! Yah! Yah! Yah! Hoolygooly! Hoolygooly! Hoolygooly! Rah! Rah! Rah!

After all that has been said about Senator Peffer's returning and his not returning to the Republican fold, we are told that he will "affiliate" with satisfactory all around, Affiliation ANOTHER GROWL.

Several months ago an individual named John Chamberlin wrote a letter to the Country Gentleman, in which he gave what purported to be the experience of a friend in Southern California such experience being very far from favorable. Mr. Chamberlin now comes to the front again, with a communication in the same paper, replying to a number of letters which he says he is receiving from eastern people, seem surprised to learn that his friend fornia, and ask whether he has not made a mistake. Mr. Chamberlin reaffirms his previous statements, and gives some more reasons why every body who can do so should stay away from a section which so many eastern people are just now trying to reach.

Among other things, this correspondenttells how he met several people from the East, who would rather be back home, were it not for the climate of some attraction to be found here. 'We should be thankful for small mercies ing raisins to horses and pigs, because they were cheaper than hay. It is true that, in a few instances, second-clas raisins have been fed to stock, during a glut in the raisin market, and while hay was worth a cent a pound or more, but we don't feed either raisins or almonds to horses or hogs as a regular diet. If we did, it might be considered as another evidence of the unbounded resources of California, and the horses might consider themselves as fortu planned the climatic conditions of this nate as that of Alexander the Great, which was fed almonds, from a silver

> Regarding the orange-growing dustry, this correspondent says:

"I was much surprised to hear that practically none of the oranges we ge from California, so far as my friend could learn, were raised on land tha was paying an income. They come ranches owned by some rich man merely sells his surplus. The best navel orange grove produces four grades of orange, of which only the best two are shipped East. The fourth grade sells on the spot at 30 cents per oushel, and if the buyer cares for so , he can get two bushels for the of one. It is not proper to allow them to decay on the ground, as they produce an acid state of soil that is no favorable to future crops.

The statement, in the first part of this quotation, is entirely erroneous and absurd. There were shipped out of the State last season about ten thousand carloads of oranges. That these or any considerable proportion of them-represent a "surplus" of rich men's ranches is palpably ridiculous. The orange-growing industry in South ern California is an industry which rests on a solid foundation, and has never been more profitable to the grow ers than during the past year, when there has been distributed about $5,000. 000 in Southern California, from this source alone. That "cull" oranges are disposed of at a low price is true, but then, the growers could afford to give them away, and still make a fine profit, at prices which have prevailed of late. One more statement made by this correspondent is sufficient to show the absolute unreliability of the man. He says: "There is not rain enough keep the hardiest tree alive, even the eucalyptus and the beautiful pepper With this maliciously false statement we leave the indictment of Mr. Chamberlin to the judgment of the thousands of eastern visitors who are with us just now. His letter is only a sample of many other disgruntled and bilious effusions, from people who will never be content anywhere upon earth. We would again suggest that these people, who are so dissatisfied with conditions here, should take the earliest opportunity to return to the places they came from. If they reply that they only stay here on account of the climate, then let them grumbling and be thankful for the climate which is perhaps saving som be a trial of Capt. Dreyfus of the French army for the crime of treason, or at least an attempt at such, which will not be a howling farce. A cablegram from Rennes quotes Maj. Car riere, the Judge-Advocate who will prosecute Drevfus before the courtmartial, as saying that, "The purpose is merely to ascertain the guilt or in nocence of Capt. Drevfus. To this end all our energies will be bent. The prisoner will be present and see and hear all that bears on the case. He may question the witnesses as fully as he desires. Everybody who knows anything about the case will be cited. Though I hold my title from the government, even the government could not make me do otherwise than my full duty. We will have all the witnesses and Dreyfus will confront them." Asked if Esterhazy would be called, Maj. Carriere said: "We will certainly summon him, but I cannot engaged in an endeavor to secure his presence."

This assurance of a fair and impar tial trial is gratifying, in view of the fantastic performance through which the accused officer was convicted and sentenced to solltary confinement in a distant island. However, the fact that the Judge-Advocate should find it nec essary to make the statement recorde above shows conclusively how little like the methods of other courts are those of France, whether they be civil or military tribunals.

In England or America, at least, just what Maj. Carriere says is going to be done in this proposed retrial of Capt Dreyfus, would have been done in the first place and as a matter of course. To "ascertain the guilt or innocence of an accused person is the purpose, i is generally presumed, for which courts are organized and trials are instituted but it was clear to the world at the time of the conviction of Capt. Dreyfus that he had not been given a fair trial, but that he was being made the vicand damnable conspiracies the world had ever been granted public knowledge of. At least, that was the impression given the public mind, which impression was given confirmation by the suicide of Col. Henry, by the confession of the unspeakable Esterhazy and by other developments equally convincing of Capt. Dreyfus's innocence If, now, France shall give this outraged French officer a fair and impartial trial along the lines laid down by Maj. Carriere and shall restore to him the uniform of which he was publicly and outageously stripped at the time of his legradation, our sister republic across the sea will be open to congratulation and the cause of human justice will be immeasurably advanced. The world waits to learn whether France is a country of justice or a country of prejudice, in which the dastardly conspirator holds the whip hand.

The county in Idaho in which the own of Wardner is located is likely to have a very pretty bill of damager to pay to the owners of the mills and mines that were recently blown up by strikers. And the bad feature about this is that the innocent taxpavers will be called upon to pay the expenses, not only those arising from damaged property, but those attendant upon court proceedings in the trials of the strikers which are now on. The smart Alecks who conspire to wreck properties do not stop to consider that every property-owner is entitled to protecin all his rights under the law, and that however serious the damage ione to his belongings by mobs and rioters, he can recover from the State to the last farthing. Therefore when lawless men raid mines, mills or other properties, they are not warring against the owners of such properties, but against the innocent and disinterested taxpayers of the section where insurrection and riot occurs. Even if the walking delegate has no bowels of compassion for the employers of labor, ne might be expected to see that when he wars on property he gains nothing except to make still heavier the burdens of those who are already carrying their share of the State's exactions.

The towns and cities of the State in all directions are choosing Goddesses of Liberty for the ever-glorious Fourth, and they represent the pink and flower of American beauty, grace, intelligence nd sterling young womanhood. Angeles will not have an especial Goddess this year, but we will have her in bevies and carload lots, by the houseful and by the trainload, the same as heretofore, and we challenge any city or town or hamlet in all the land to natch her in airiness, charm, sweetness, savoir faire and all the other qualities that go to make the Amerian girl the most lovely, lovable and fascinating creature that the world is blessed and beautified with. 'Rah for the American girl in general and the Los Angeles girl in particular!

The Kansas City Star complains that, "To the eyes of the landsmen, the cup-defender Columbia does not resemble a boat, when out of the water any more than it resembles a meat-ax or a currycomb." Never mind, though, what the Columbia looks like: the question is, can she win out?

Kansas City is somewhat exultant ecause that city is about to vote on the question of a $400,000 bond issue for additional school buildings. But Kansas City need not strut; Los Angeles is just about to vote on a $420,000 bond proposition for the same purpose, The baby crop is great out here.

The Detroit News is of the opinion hat Maj.-Gen. Otis "needs either more soldiers or less territory," but as Gen. Otis is something like 7000 miles nearer the seat of war than the Detroit News, perhaps it would be just as well to wait for that officer to say what he wants.

THE BURNS MUCK.

MEXICAN COLONEL DAN STILL RUN NING THE MACHINE.

ectacle of Official Degradation Without a Parallel in the City

[San Francisco Call, June 28:] The Board of Health presented last night a spectacle of indecent, official degra-dation that is perhaps without parallel in the history of the city. The members of the board drank the nauseating dose of blackguard patronage presented to them by Dan Burns, and squirmed in disgust, even at their own actions. They were forced to sacrifice their personal and professional reputations, to dishonor themselves in eyes of their friends, and of public. to cover themselves with humiliating shame and appoint to pub-humiliating shame and appoint to public office the ruffianly crew selected by their political master.

The scene was pitiable in a public place. It seemed an act of gratuitous maliciousness to force decent men so to debase themselves at the dictation of a political outlaw. But the members of the board had to submit. If they had not done so Burns would have dismissed them from their positions as contemptuously as he would discard a shoe which did not fit him. The members of the Board of Health are his creatures and their only pledge and assurance of official station is their sycophancy to him.

So they became last night his official lackeys. They placed themselves cheek by jowl with the unspeakable Dennery, lifting his disgusting personality into their own nest. They brushed shoulders in fraternal good-fellowship with the ill-smelling, vile-mouthed, foul-brained denizens of the tenderloin, who become public servants because they are in the train of Burns.

loin, who become public servants be-cause they are in the train of Burns. The members of the board followed their instructions to the letter. Each was provided with a typewritten list of appointments, and each in turn proposed shamefacedly the name of a proposed shamefacedly the name of the Mexican for an allowed the proposed shamefacedly the name of the mexican for an allowed the name of the name o favorite of the Mexican for an al-lotted position. As a spectator remarked: to me the limit of endurance is passed when a man must drag himself through the mire of another man's shame, and then exhibit himself to public scorn." But the Mexican's command had been given and it was obeyed. The programme as foreshadowed in the Call was carried out with one exception.

shadowed in the Call was carried out with one exception.

Long before the meeting was called to order the rooms of the board were crowded by a motley herd, whose presence made it necessary frequently to open the windows as a measure of sanitary precaution. At 9 o'clock the board convened. After the transaction of some routine business Dr. Coffey arose and hesitatingly moved to declare the position of secretary vacant. There was a buzz of expectancy, and Secretary Dunne presented a written protest against removal. It was ignored, and Secretary Dunne's official head was decapitated.

Then followed one of the dramatic incidents of the sesson. Dr. Coffey moved that Leon Dennery be appointed incidents of the sesson. Dr. Coffey moved that Leon Dennery be appointed to fill the vacancy. There was a murmur of surprise in the room. The sound seemed to strike Dr. Coffey like a blow. His face flushed until it was crimson, and some one said pityingly that the young physician was not yet altogether lost to shame. He probably felt what the name of Dennery typifies, and he is not yet ready to accept the consequences of his own action. He is not yet ready to accept the consequences of his own action. He is not yet ready to admit that since he could not raise Dennery to his own level, he has sunk to that of Dennery. Dr. Coffey sat down and Leon Dennery was unanimously elected secretary. Mayor Phelan was not there and did not attend during the evening. Dennery's friends as a matter of course, are gratified at his appointment. They take it as a vindication of his manner and method of life. Four reputable physicians have made him their official equal, and it is only an imaginary line that divides the official from the ndividual. As an equal of the members of the board of Health, it is suggested that Dennery be dined by the board at the home of John I. Sabin, the father-in-law of Dr. Payne, for example, in honor of the rehabilitation of the tenderloin's most disgusting representative.

LIFE'S MIRROR.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits There are souls that are pure and true! Then give to the world the best you have And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your life will flow, A strength in your utmost need; Heve foith, and a score of hearts will show Their faith in your word and deed. Give truth, and your gifts will be paid in

And honor will honor meet: And a smile that is sweet will surely find A smile that is just as sweet! Give pity and sorrow to those who mourn; You will gather in flowers again The scattered seeds from your thought out-

Though the sowing seemed but vain. For life is the mirror of king and slave,

'Tis 'ust what we are and do;

Then give to the world the best you have

And the best will come back to you.

Corsica and the Vendetta.

[Westminster Review:] Persons who derive their ideas of Corsica as it is today from Prosper Merime's novel, "Colpmba," will be doomed to some disappointment. Manners and customs have changed a great deal in the island since the date, shortly after the battle of Waterloo, when the gallant British officer and his daughter visited Colomba in her ancestral castle at Pietranera. The vendetta, which is the theme of that thrilling story, has greatly diminished. During the carnival we fancied that we had come upon a real instance of this picturesque barbarism. One workman killed another in a cafe, and then, in the expressive Corsican phrase, "took to the marquis," or brushwood, which covers a large portion of the island, and has, from time immemorial, been the refuge of outlaws and bandits. This legend subsisted for some days, and excited a new interest in life in Corsica, and quite a large demand for copies of "Colomba." But a conversation which I had with the judge d'instruction, who had investigated the case, proved that it was, after all, as he expressed it, a crime vulgaire, and not, as we had hoped, a crime corse.

We afterward had the satisfaction of seeing the malefactor iled in chains between two mounted policemen on his way into Ajaccio, whereas the traditional bandit would have been fed and supplied with powder and shot by the country people, who would have rather gone to the stake than betrayed his hiding place to the authorities. Here and there vendetta may still linger in the island, but it has now become a means of attracting the tourist, who is invited to buy bloodthirsty-looking knives and daggers, bearing such choice inscriptions as: "Vendetta Corsa; morte al nemico ("death to the enemy:") or, still more gruesome: Va diritto al cuore del nemico ("death to the enemy:") These choice weapons form. together with gourds engraved with portraits of Napoleon, or the negro's head, which is the Corsican crest, the

"It cost Henry Burkline just $40 to shoot four doves out of season." The remarkable feature of this item is that it occurred in San Jose. The type is clear, and equal to that used by the most pre-tentious modern newspapers. Speculations were then rife in regard to the Presidential contest of 1860, in which the slavery question played a leading part, and the paper contains many references to the "Black Repub-licans." There are a number of advertisements of negroes for sale, and

The City's Reproach

NEW YORKER. Los Angeles is a beautiful city. New Yorkers say "the queen of cities." One thing surpaises me. It is this. Those unsightly, great bill-boards on some of your best streets. Notably on Hill, between Fourth and Fifth. No Common Council of a backwoods town would suffer such a nulsance on its streets. If your Mayor and his adviseres would walk down the streets where these abominations are, I think they could not sleep mights until they were removed.

C. R. WINCHESTER, Los Angeles: Several of us subscribers to your valuable paper have had quite a discussion as to when the government will commence taking the census, the length of time allowed, and the pay of the officers engaged in taking it. Will you please answer through your columns and oblige?

W. C. PATTERSON, Los Angeles: While there may have been grounds for occasional criticism of J. M. Glass, Chief of Police—and who of us is perfect—I venture the assertion that there is not a man in Los Angeles, who in all respects, will average up to him in fitness for his present position, and in general efficiency. I know nothing about the exact merits of the controversy between him and some members of the Police Commission—at the same time I feel that I express the sentiments of the financial community when I assert my belief that his displacement or humiliation would be disastrous to the peace and order of this community. for occasional criticism of J. M. Glass,

A Critic Criticised.

A Critic Criticised.

G. M. GIFFEN, Los Angeles: Will you kindly take steps to have the Morehouse law enforced, in so far as the article in double-leaded head lines in the Record of June 30 is concerned, referring to the collection of poll tax by our County Assessor, Alex Caldwell? The article should be signed. The reading public always likes to know the name of the author of such a supinely idjoit effusion.

Our Assessor is "roasted" to a finish for having the temerity to collect poll tax to the extent of some $21,000, for which he receives a commission of 15 per cent., authorized by law, and made mandatory upon the Assessor. The Record Solon (?) proceeds to mercilessly flay a county official for doing—what? Simply that which he is compelled by law to do.

Why all this howl about poll tax collections? The Assessor is not at fault. He is simply a public servitor and sworn to perform his duty. Is it because in his unswerving attention to duty and absolute impartiality he has had the temerity to collect that obnoxious $2 tax from some of the Record force, and thus aroused this whirlwind of contumely and abuse? If not, what is the cause?

It is unjust, unfair and demoralizing in every sense of the word for a public or private individual to criticise and excerate our officials for doing their duty.

If the performance of this duty.

or private individual to criticise and excoriate our officials for doing their duty.

If the performance of this duty arouses antagonism and resentment, then at least be just enough to place the odlum where it belongs, but do not discourage a conscientious official in his effort to do the work he is sworn to perform. Let all laws be enforced, and honor the men with courage to enforce them impartially, without fear or favors. If a law be unfair or unjust, the remedy is simple—repeal it. The writer has had the good fortune (?) to pay his poll tax for each and every one of the past fifteen years, and has never fallen in love with that particular law yet. I do not believe in it, and never shall, yet I admire the man who will impartially perform his duty, and I deprecate these unjust and slanderous attacks upon an upright and conscientious official who must, if he do that which he has sworn ao do, collect at tax for which the law allows him 15 per cent.

Uncle Sam Proceeds Against Hugh Robinson of Fresno.

Papers were filed in the United States

government, 450 for the cutting of $150 yearth of timber from the Sierre Forest government, $450 for the cutting of $150 worth of timber from the Sierra Forest reservation, in Fresno county, Hugh Robinson, a resident of that section being the defendant. The complaint alleges that Robinson has for many years been cutting timber from the section named, and that he has cut a total of 150 trees, valued at $10 each. The additional $300 is in the nature of penalty beyond the actual damage done. The timber cut is alleged to have been made into shakes and other lumber.

Los Angeles will celebrate the Fourth of July this year with a new enthusiasm, rendered deeper and more sincere the quickening of patriotic feeling which resulted from the appearance of new public questions of grave import.

t will be the people's celebration.

Less money has been spent this year than in the past, for the near approach of the N.E.A. Convention put so many burdens on the public-spirited that it was deemed best not to at-tempt an expensive celebration. In-stead of the factitious patriotism of a costly parade, and a splurge of ex-pensive joilifications, the day will be an old-time Fourth of July, rather an old-time Fourth of July, rather than a fiesta.

The official programme was announced yesterday. There will be a morning meeting at 10 o'clock at Hazard's Pavillon, four afternoon meetings at 2:30 o'clock in the city parks, and an evening band concert and display of fireworks at Westlake. The detailed programme is as follows: Hazard's Pavillon-Music, Arend's Orchestra; Capt. F. J. Cressey, call to order; Rev. A. E. Smither, invocation; music, orchestra; Mayor Fred Eaton, chairman; Prof. D. H. Morrison, "Star Spangled Banner;" Prof. Melville Dozier, "Declaration of Independence;" music, orchestra; Hon. J. He claims that the society is very much in need for the saloon that the society is very much in need for that the society is very much in need for that the society is very much in in haste for El Paso, and, although a not search was made for him, he managed to reach the border. Serious trouble awaits him in case he returns to Mexico, as the assault upon the soldiers, being considered an insult to the dignity of the country, is looked upon as a very aggravated offense.

The Chinamen have virtually acquired a monopoly of the eating-house business in these parts, and there is a tendency to force them out. A recent change has compelled them to vacate the eating-houses on the Southern Pacific east of El Paso. It is believed that these eating-houses tend to facilitate the smuggling of Chinese into this country, by furnishing a place of refuge, and the elimination of such places would be welcomed by the United States customs authorities.

Sunday bull fights are still on the programme at Juarez, and seem to be flourishing. Inhabitants of that place are required by law to provide fresh water in front of their doors each day-for dogs.

The Mexican city of Juarez is much water in front of their doors each day—for dogs.

The Mexican city of Juarez is much wrought up over a rule which imposes a heavy discriminating tax on imported beer, with the object of promoting home industry in the State of Chihuahua. It is estimated that the tax will mulct some dealers to the extent of $6000 per annum, and many others in smaller sums. There has been a meeting of dealers interested to protest against the tax, but it is doubtful if any favorable results will follow, since the policy of Mexico is to stimulate domestic industries by heavy duties or taxes. Last fall there was a stop made in the large daily importation of provisions and groceries from El Paso across the river, by the imposition of a heavy duty on such articles.

ORIENTAL MEDICINE."

In two parts, Treatises Nos. 4 and 5; in all 265 pages, illustrated. Contains the substance of all previous publications by this company, and much that is new. Describes the new method for home use of the ce.e-brated Oriental Herbal Remedies, with full directions. More than a hundred purely vegetable medicines adapted to the cure of all diseases, whether acute or chronic. Valuable chapters on diet and hygiene.

This volume shows how every man may be his own physician and may save sickness and doctors' bills by the use of preventive remedies. The long list described in this book includes many simple, harmiess but very efficacious remedies, the use of which at the first symptom of disease will save many a painful, perhaps fatal, illness.

This is a new departure of the Foo and Wing Herb Company. It is employing their skill and knowledge in a new way for the benefit of the world. The descriptive volume contains many new and striking theories of diseases and their cure. The remedies, which are skillfully and tastily prepared, in permanent forms, are a complete series for home cure of all ordinary diseases. The book and the remedies go together.

Friends in Peril. [San Diego Union:] An incident of orest fires in the hills of the Descanso neighborhool, in Southern California, illustrates the comradeship that com-mon peril brings about among beasts as well as among men. After the flames had completed their work of destruc-tion and spread a pall over the hills a rancher went forth among the charred stumps and smoking brushheaps to look for a number of cattle and colts which he feared had been hemmed in by fire. He went across gully and ridge in his search, until at last he saw his stock some little distance ahead.

He was more than astonished upon coming up to the group to find not only his cattle and coits, but a deer, three wildcats, a coyote and several rabbits, all alive and apparently in no fear of him. They watched his approach with indifference, the timidity gone from the big-eyed deer, no venom in the wildcat's purr and honesty shin-

Association Convention on Spring street began to take on form yesterday, the booths of all the rail-roads having been put in partial shape while the arrival of Dr. Irwin Shepard and his staff gave a head to the asso-ciation liself, as distinguished from the ad of the local Committee on Prepa rations. Hereafter much of the worl which has devolved on the local com-mittee will be attended to by these officers of the association.

As the visitors were welcomed yesterday with gifts of fruit and flowers it was manifest that the Reception bered more than 500 persons, many of whom are teachers. Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Hopkins of Dr. Shepard's staff, and experts in the work of registration after the experience of several conventions, opened the general registration bureau in the general headquarters at No. 425 South Spring street. Tomorrow the owners of all booths will take possession of them, and the rooms will be gay with bunting.

The branch N. E. A. postoffice will be opened Wednesday at the headquarters, and all mail addressed in care of the N.E.A. will be made up as far as possible by the railway mail agents, and upon arrival here it will be sent direct to the N.E.A. branch office. All delegates throughout the country have been notified through the Associated Press to have mail addressed care of the N.E.A. Gen. Mathews will detail two experienced clerks to conduct the branch. The registry and money order business will be conducted at the general postoffice. A letter and a paper box will be placed on the sidewalk in front of the headquarters, from which eleven collections will be made daily. The Southern Pacific brought forty-five people to the city by the 9:25 o'clock train last night, and 180 are due to arrive at the same hour tonight. This morning 186 will arrive in two Santa Fé trains, due at 7:30 and 8:30 o'clock, respectively. F. W. Shoemaker and W. L. [Vicksburg Correspondence St. Louis lobe-Democrat:] He was lean and lank, with keen gray eyes, deep set, under shaggy brows. His beard was grizzled, and hair almost white, keen and gaunt as a greyhound.

He was picked up in an unconscious condition and hurried to the Receiving Hospital, where it was found that he had sustained bruises on both sides of his head and a tooth knocked out of the lower side of his left jaw. His back also contained a few superficial bruises where the car struck him, but whether he has received internal injuries can only be determined by later developments. The injured man is a baker by occupation, and came from San Francisco two months ago, where he has a family. He has been rooming at the Bakers' Home, No. 527½. East First street.

Bert Graft, of No. 339 Edgeware Road, had his right foot injured yesterday afternoon while moving furniture. I wish I could paint this man to the very life. He is a type fast disappearing. Another decade or so and he will live only through the pen and brush—on paper and canvas. He belongs to another age, is literally a part of the past, and, somehow, looking at him, you felt his home was no longer here. It was curious to contemplate this man, as it would be to inspect some rare and ancient work of art, which you knew could not be preserved much longer. could not be preserved much longer. The rancher was in no mood to make friends of such strange creatures, and at once drove his istock through the smoldering brush, the deer going along with the cattle, the rabbits hopping along at the ranched's heels, the wildcats slouching along behind, and the coyote, unable to follow, withing a pathetic appeal for succor. When the burning field was, passed, the deer broke into a run for the distant hills, the rabbits were away like a flash, and the old defiance and smarling leer came back to the wildcat's, who scorned to make a show of haste. They walked slowly out of sight.

battle, in which the enemy suffered severely.

"Some of the boys declared if the mules had held out we'd have raised the siege, which is a compliment to the mules, for it's more than we were able to do without them."

He chuckled, as a man who is nelther too old nor too good to enjoy a joke—on the other fellow—and continued:

Among the boys of the town was a half-witted lad who was particularly incorrigible, and whose constant companion was a little monkey, who attended him as faithfully as Mary's little lamb. One of his mental weaknesses was know to be a confusion of the ideas of mine and thine, and after one very considerable theft the local Sherlock Holmes found footprints of Jocko, the monk in regions from which the missing articles had disappeared, and so the boy was arrested. There was no law for imprisoning the monkey, so he was not "pinched." The boy was a model prisoner for several days, but was suddent selzed with a desire to have his monkey with him. So earnestly did he beg for this that the good-natured jailer had Jocko brought to the cell. That night the lad, who was supposed to be without intelligence, began clawing out the mortar around one of the largest stones in the outer wall. He could not do much with his blunt fingers and weak nalls, but the monkey immediately began imitating him. The long claws of the animal soon loosened up enough mortar to enable the boy to pull the stone out of the wall, and before morning both boy and monkey had disappeared.

a man had gotten into that tree, so I just dropped down and kept watch. Pretty soon a man began descending the tree, holding his rife in one hand. He reached the lowest limb and began drawing a skiff around from behind the tree. I rested my rifle on the stump of my injured arm and as he was in the act of dropping into the boat I let him have it. He pitched forward into the water like a boy diving into a mill pond. The thing tickled me so I laughed. Then I didn't remember anything more until I woke in the hospital to hear the doctors discussing the amputation of my arm. I told 'em the arm should stay with me, or I'd go with it. I suppose they thought one fool more or less didn't count, so left the arm on and I got well.

suppose they thought one fool more or less didn't count, so left the arm on and I got well.

"There were some pathetic incidents, too, one of which I well remember. Now I have heard somewhere how the Scotch or English, it doesn't matter which, they are both the same now, joined with the enemy in singing 'Annie Laurle.' Well, I'll tell you what happened right here on the heights of Vicksburg. It was toward the close of the seige, and things were desperate. It was death or surrender; so death ceased to be terrible. If I remember aright it was Sunday, and the boys had been in the rifle-pits, under a hot sun, all day. At nightfall they came out of the pits, and climbing up the breastworks, lay under the brow of the hill to cool off. It was a bright moonlight night and we knew the enemy occupied a skirt of woods just outside, but they couldn't see us through twenty feet of earth, so we lay there in quiet, until some devil-may-care fellow started 'Dixie.' Every man on the hillside joined in the chorus. The last notes hadn't died away, when a company of Yankees, lying close up, responded with 'The Girl I Left Behind Me.' Then somebody started 'Home, Sweet Home,' and the Johnnies, in the excitement, stood up to sing it and the Yanks, to a man, marched out of the wood, lined up in front of the Johnnies and jolned in the chorus. There in a single stone's throw of each other, the North and the South mingled their voices in the sweet and solemn strains of that great heart melody. Then there was a waving of handkerchiefs, or something white that 'looked like handkerchiefs, and the Johnnies slipped back behind the hill, while the Yanks returned to the woods.

"Gentlemen, when I joined the army I'd an idea that Yanks were animals."

woods.
"Gentlemen, when I joined the army I'd an idea that Yanks were animals, whose chief end was to serve as targets for Southern bullets. Then I became convinced that they were simply 'fighting machines' but that night I became satisfied that Yanks were always and pretty good fellows at uman-and pretty good fellows, at

I became satisfied that Yanks were human—and pretty good fellows, at that.

"There were dark days ahead for us, and they came. It was not long before Pemberton marched out to meet Grant on that historic hilliside, three miles from the city, to sign articles of surrender. There was nothing else to do. Wisdom and good generalship both demanded it, but there were men in Vicksburg, myself of the number, who would rather have faced a firing squad and given signal for their own execution than to have surrendered their arms. This enforced surrender somehow embittered me, and I was, until recently, very recently, what is termed an unreconstructed rebel. But all that is changed now.

"I was down at Atlanta, Ga., when William McKinley, the Yankee President, made his great speech, and I went to hear him, not because he was President, but because he was one of those fighting Yankees, who never looked so well, acted so game or fought so desperately as when their breasts were right against Southern steel—one of those men, who in a four years' course at the college of arms, taught me to honestly respect them.

"He spoke of a united country, and fraternal people; of the sons of men who wore the blue and the gray, fighting side by side for the nation's flag, and then he said something about northern hands strewing flowers on the honored graves of Southern soldiers, and I became 'reconstructed' in the astonishingly short period of about thirteen seconds. I wanted to go up on the northern hands strewing flowers on the presonally you are just the kind of man I like to see at the head of this great and growing nation. "Later on I returned home and when 'Decoration day' rolled around, I loaded myself with flowers and went out to the national cemetery here for the first time. As I gazed upon those beautiful terraces, broad drives and rows of gleaming marble, there was no bitterness in my heart, because many of my southern comrades sleep in unmarked graves. So I scattered my flowers, and hoped in the great here.

brave men might recognize one another, and that all enmity might forever be at rest.

"And now, gentlemen, I'm on my way East to Yankeeland, going to Boston, of all places, to visit my grand-daughter, who's married to a Yankee doctor. There's a baby at their house named for me, and I'm going to see the North- and South united, in the person of that chubby-handed Infent."

The speaker rose from his chair, and waving us a courteous good night, entered the hotel.

We watched him across the court. His shoulders were bowed from the weight of years, his face furrowed from care and old Father Time had whitened his hair with the frosts of many winters, but age had not dimmed the fre of his eye, nor taken the elasticity of youth from his step or the leve of humankind from his heart. So we wished him joy of his trip to Yankeeland.

[Hannibal (Mo.) Record:] Lizzie Young, colored, lives in Hanibal, Mo. She is 42 years old; married, yet childless. She was born on Spencer Creek, Ralls county, and was raised at Hydesburg. Thornt Frazier was her master before she was set free. Dr. Johnson examined her with the X-ray at the hospital at Quincy not long ago and told her that she had a monster in her stomach—a full-grown four-foot moccasin which she was compelled to feed regularly in order to keep it from crawling into her throat and choking her to death. She was 12 of 13 years old when she first discovered the fact that there was something alive in her stomach, but her parents laughed at her, saying it was a foolish notion. When she was a young girl she had a habit of kneeling down at the spring or creek and drinking, and while so doing must have swalof doors, but he don't do so any more, and while so doing must have swallowed a small snake, which gradually grew to its present size. After the snake had grown to a pretty big reptile she dare not eat anything it did not like, for in case she did it would squirm around and give her great pain, crawling into her throat, compelling her to force it back with her hands. Recently she was operated upon and two buckets of water removed from her since which time the snake has been dormant. She thinks it is dead. Her general health is improving, and she hopes to recover. Perhaps this is another Elsie Verner case, and the snake has lived out its natural life. It is a problem for scientists.

American Troops in Manila

[Lieut. Ackerman in Collier's Weekly:] Landing at the office of the caply:] Landing at the onice of the most tain of the port last month, the most prominent feature of the street was prominent feature of the treet was was everywhere. For some reason an unusually strong guard occupied the principal streets. Every few hundred unusually strong guard occupied the principal streets. Every few hundred feet a sentry walked his beat, while here and there stood groups of blue-shirted brawny fellows talking army gossip. One was no sooner impressed with the numbers of troops than the suspicion was bound to rise that these men were not American volunteers at all, but a disguised regiment of Grenader Guards carefully selected for their physique and bearing. And here the writer wishes to make his meaning clear and strong. Never in all his experience has he ever seen a finer-looking lot of soldierly men, more courteous in manner and clean in conversation, than he met from time to time in the intrenchments of the western volunteers. No comparison is intended; for, at this time, no eastern regiments had been visited, and there were none in the vicinity. There has been so much laudation of some of our soldiers' minor exploits, which they themselves describe as foot-races, that the steadiness, patience and general high character of the men is apt to be lost sight of in indiscriminate and fulsome praise. They are men to be proud of, Americans through and through, and many a man esteemed tall would look like a boy among them. The losses of our troops will bring sorrow and suffering to many a home, but to the country itself it will bring something that money cannot buy, and which even long training often fails to inculcate. These men had already learned self-reliance, decision, and, withal, quiet patience: they will go back home far better equipped to meet life's responsibilities, with calm courage and good judgment.

sibilities, with calm courage and good judgment.

Along the Pasig every steamer flies the American ensign; hundreds of coolles stagger along grunting with burdens of army stories, others are extending the customhouse railroad track, and a tiny engine, with a soldier engineer and a soldier inspector is moving lines of trucks laden with Manila hemp into the storehouses. Black hulks of cascos, so strange in appearance of fittings and crew that they might well have floated in from Mars or the far side of the moon, are continuously coming and going, but through it all the soldier boys keep their heads, and there seems neither confusion nor delay.

The sullen peoples had been taught that our men were cowards; they judging from the months of patient waiting while the city was practically besteged, hed actually come almost to spect for the powerful character that can submit and wait with patience for the order to act.

The divergent character of the people and troops is best seen at noon; then the vast majority of the shops and offices are closed until 2 p. m., while their owners "be a midday siesta. Not so the soldiers; this is a lounging time, it is true, but many are found exploring the streets and lanes, so that for two hours it seems to be a city peopled entirely by soldiers. Late in the afternoon the streets are again full of activity—the tiny Filipino ponies are darting in every direction with their toy herdics, native women, with masses of loose flowing hair, move about in couples, making purchases, plebeian carromatos mingle with handsome little caleches, with drivers in semi-livery, and roll over the Puente d'Espana, on their way to the drive on the Luneta. Some of the carriages contain seemingly pale American women, often with nurse and children. Their hair is smooth and shining, their costumes charming, and although night after night the rattle of muskery or the boom of cannon tells of an assault on the lines scarcely one half-hour's drive away, their faces are calm and unruffled.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 26, 1899.

I came here from Grand Rapids, Mich., a year ago last April, suffering from a very severe scrotum rupture. I was so bad off that I could hardly walk. My son, J. F. Haller, having been oured by Prof. Joseph Fandrey, European Specialist in Rupture Curing, 64° South Main St., insisted on my going with him to see the Professor to find out what he could do for me, so we went (although I had little faith, having tried several doctors in the East without success). The Professor called my case a hard one to cure, for I am 64 years old, but he gave me relief at once, and I have done work such as to be done on the farm, also rode horseback.

Today I am perfectly WELL and HAPPY, and I think him the CHAMPION OF RUPTURE CURERS. He cured me without injection, operation or detention from work. Any one wishing information, call or address to 1454 San Fernando St. F. HALLER. Barber Shop, opposte River Station. Anthem, "Praise Ye, the Lord" (Holden.)

MONEY POWER FORCES FRANCE TO FREE DREYFUS.

Secret History in the Affairs of Continental Europe - Anti-Semitism Dealt a Blow by the Holders of [Paris Cablegram to St. Louis Globe Democrat: There is an inside story to this great crisis in France which has threatened, and even now threatens the stability of the republic, a story which has just come out authoritatively, and from no less a source than M. Brunetlere, the editor of the Revue des Deux Mondes, and one of the leading men of France. I have just had the story confirmed from other sources, and it shows that the new court-martial ordered for the nominal retrial of Capt. Alfred Dreyfus dare not do less than declare him guiltless of the charges against him. The secret history is perhaps more in-The secret history is perhaps more in-teresting than the history that has been published from day to day, for it shows that it was not through mere desire to do justice that the Court of Cassation was ordered to declare Dreyfus innocent and order the court-martial at Rennes to retry him and find the same verdict, but it was through fear that if this was not done France would be benjury; and a revolution would be bankrupt, and a revolution would start from without Paris, which would overthrow all who are or were in power. This inside history reads more like a romance than sober truth, and shows who are the real uncrowned kings, monarchical and republican, of Europe.

THE ANTI-SEMITE WAVE.

When the anti-Semite wave struck France as it previously struck Russia, Capt. Alfred Dreyfus became an object of hatred in the general staff, and this particularly as the general staff is really the aristocratic body of the military establishment of France. Dreyfus was the only officer of Jewish blood in that corps elite, and every effort was made to get rid of him. He was invited to resign the post he held, which was one of great importance, as it had to do with the defenses of the republic. Had he resigned his place there he could easily have been ordered to a post in French West Africa, where he would have conveniently died of a tropical fever. But he would not resign, and the result was a conspiracy to get him out of the army by the foulest of means, and the imbecility of the officers being as great as their corruption, they resorted to forgery, belleving, that they could thus rid themselves of a Jew, and at once load the responsibility for their crimes upon someone whom they desoised. The result of this plan was that Dreyfus was condemned for life to confinement on Devil's Island, off Cayenne, where is was hoped he would die of yellow fever, the sooner the better.

THE JEWS AROUSED. THE ANTI-SEMITE WAVE. THE JEWS AROUSED.

When Dreyfus was condemned every Jew in continental Europe of position felt that the act was a personal menace to him. They believed the Jew haters, in their blind rage, had deter-mined to eliminate the Jewish race from position and power everywhere, and had commenced with the French and had commenced with the French army, as an easy place to begin. In both Austria and Russia there are many Jews in minor, but responsible positions, under the government. These were the first to take alarm. Finally, when Dreyfus, declaring his innocence, was deported to a desolate island off the coast of French Guiana his kinsmen hald a meeting to consider what should was deported to a desolate island on the coast of French Guiana his kinsmen held a meeting to consider what should be done for him, and further, for their own salvation. Dreyfus's most influential relation was then the leading rabbi at Strasburg. He made a tour of continental Europe in the interest of his kinsman. He furnished indubitable evidence that the "affaire Dreyfus" was but the beginning of a raid against the Jews of Europe that would be more far-reaching than had ever been known. And he pointed out the only antidote was to meet the danger defantly. They held the money bags of Europe, he said. They had only to notify the leaders in this scheme of persecution that if it were attempted all the great Jewish banking houses—the cution that if it were attempted all the great Jewish banking houses—the Rothschilds, the Bischoffs-Cheims, the Goldschmidts (the most powerful house in Europe, next to the Rothschilds,) and the Ephrussis, in Russia—would simultaneously begin to lower France's ducing Russian securities 24 points in thirteen days.

They had learned the potency of this weapon when they made Russia hold her hand in the last Jewish persecution there—nearly two decades ago—by reducing Russian securities 24 points in thirteen days.

"Touch another of our people, and not another rouble shall you have to save your empire." said Michael Ephrusel, head of the great house at Odessa, the largest grain dealers in the world, to M. de Giers, then Russian Premier. They would take their capital to England and America, where it would be safe, they said, and M. de Giers, a broad, liberal-minded, kindly man, was very pleased when his im-Giers, a broad, liberal-minded, kindly man, was very pleased when his imperial master, Alexander II. brother of the present Czar, told the Metropolitan of Novgorod and St. Petersburg that the church must let up on its persecution of the holy synod for the governing of the holy synod for the governing of Russian, Greek or national faith run in the name of the Emperor, there was no occasion for protest. The order simply had to be obeyed, and it was. And that is wby, just as the philanthropic world of England was getting ready to make known its sympathy the persecution suddenly ended. Russia could not afford to be put into bankruotcy, even to please the holy synod and the Metropolitan of Novgorod.

FRENCH BONDS FALL.

The death of M. Faure and the ac-

The death of M. Faure and the accession of M. Loubet to the Presidency of France furnished an excellent op portunity for the Jews to put their scheme touching Dreyfus into effect. A deep or two after he came into effect.

A deep or two after he came into office the rentes fell off. Every one supposed it was the usual speculative fluctuations, and the state's securities would recover in a day or two, but they did not. On the contrary, they began to drop a little daily, and there was no advance at all. This was serious.

The national securities of France are in the hands of every peasant of the country. Of the 1.3,000,000,000 French-German indemnity bonds, the peasantry of France took up about all that was offered them, and today hold two-fifths of the entire sum. The government prefers the peasant to any other bondholder. He gives it no trouble. He has but a few hundreds in the honds, perhaps, which are hidden away and will not come to the notice of the government until they are ready for redemption. Now the national debt of France is nearly $120 per capita (that of the United States is $14.20,) so that whatever disturbs or affects the value of the French debt touches the sensitive purse of the entire body politic. A national debt held by its own pecole is a mighty accurate barometer of the State's condition.

So, when the French rentes heran to tumble, every one said: "Why, what's up?" But when the peasantry hecame alarmed, if was a most serious matter for the state. When a man becomes frishtened about his money he is in the worst scare he can know, and no creature alive equals the Frenchman of the peasant class in the tenacity with which he holds on to his dollars. Understanding all this, it is easy to A day or two after he came into office the rentes fell off. Every one sup-see how the cunning Israelite got in his effective work.

"Upset the government? Yes. Why not," he would say to the bourgeois or peasant, anxious about his securities.

"If you, the people, will compet the government to do the right thing just once, in this Dreyfus affair, we will hold our hands. Otherwise, we will get out of your country, and then smash it."

The day the Dreyfus rehearing was

The day the Dreyfus rehearing was ordered, the drop in the rentes ceased.

THE LONDON CONFERENCE. There is no doubt that the affaire Dreyfus gave the higher class of Israelites of Europe the most anxious Israelites of Europe the most anxious time they have known for a generation. In Spain and Austria they had been safe enough. Owing to the promptness with which the great Berlin firm of the Gleichroders came to the assistance to old Kaiser William, in 1870, when a great amount of money had to be obtained in a very short time, that house was under the direct protection of imperial Germany. But the others believed that a concerted movement was on foot to deprive the Jewish people everywhere of their social and personal rank and influence and relegate them back to the almost parish class in which they were five centuries ago.

On the first day of March the leading Israelites in Europe met in London. There were not over a dozen, but they could control 15 2000 2000

don. There were not over a dozen, but they could control f.5,000,000,000, or nearly $1,000,000,000, or nearly all the ready cash in France. in twenty-four hours. They discussed the further means necessary to the release of Draylus.

the ready cash in France, in twentyfour hours. They discussed the further means necessary to the release of Dreyfus.

Everything has worked out just as it was planned. A combination of such enormous wealth and power is practically invincible.

Another duty is left to be done by the Jewish Council of Three that is intrusted with the solution of the Dreyfus question. It is charged with securing the punishment of the men who perjured themselves and shamed justice. And the late heads of the general staff realize that at last Nemesis is on their track, that the reputation of an officer who had harmed or wronged none of them.

must be explated by such a punishment as the crime deserves and a penalty that can neither be evaded nor mitigated. It can be no pleasant feeling to know that the fates are on one's track in such a pitiless form.
Two members of the court that condemned Dreyfus have already committed suicide, preferring to face the hereafter beyond to facing the future here, and though the prosecution has not submitted its line of charges against Dreyfus, at the new courtmartial, that will try him, there is no doubt at all in the minds of his friends that he will be triumphantly acquitted.

The court convened is one of high rank, and numbers a majority of men who are known to the whole French army as being absolutely incorruptible, and fearless. Moreover, the order

SUNDAY, JULY 2, 1899. CAUSES OF DEAT

How to Save Yourself From an Early Grave.

The nervous excesses of today cause the early demise of half our population. Modern civilization is very complex, competition is fierce, and life is full of fret and fever. In a kind of frenzy men rush though the weeks, not living life, simply consuming it. The trains are never still, the fires in the factories never out; even at midnight the thunder of commerce is heard upon the streets. The commercial spirit so dominates our era that many are mere patent animated machines. An age of telephones and raisways, when the modern newspaper is as large as an ancient book, involves high-pressure brain action. Many of our people are going down with nervous wreckage through the flerce strain to which they are constantly subjected. The stimulants to ambition and avarice are excessive.

But you cannot satisfy your ambition nor reap the harvest of fortune against this ceaseless striving unless you are buoyed up by hope, courage, energy and health. Hope, courage and energy are spontaneous with good health. Foremost in importance is a good healthy body, for out of the strength of the body developes the activity of the brain. If you are nervous or run down, have thin blood, pale lips, dragging pains about the loins, con-stipated or dyspeptic, accompanied with headache, pimples on your face coated tongue, bad breath, despondency, you cannot achieve your aim.

If you have any of the above symptoms do not deceive yourself or remain in ignorance while you are being dragged down by disease. The successful manner in which disease is treated and cured at the Homo-Alo Medical Institute has brought success and happiness to hundreds of people whose lives would otherwise have been complete failures. The physicians of this institution are graduates of the most noted American and European of this institution are graduates of the most noted American and European colleges, and should not be classed with so-called "expert specialists" and travelling quacks that infest the State of California.

Mrs. A. C. Manning of No. 216 East Third street, city, says:
"For the benefit of all isles people. I wish to state my experience, and how I have been rele sed from the clutches of disease, that has caused me to suffer uniold agonies for the past four years.

I was almost crazy with my head, ears and throat. I had a continual ring in a my ears and severe pains across my temples, I was so deaf that I could not suffer the could not should be an experience of the could not should be an experience of the could not shape that to cotantly infa ced and my stomach and liver were in such bud shape that too county infa ced and my stomach and liver were in such bud shape that too cashily infa ced and my stomach and liver were in such bud shape that the continuity infa ced and my stomach and liver were the sustence were much constipated, and when I awoke in the morning the taste in my mouth was something awful. I had been treated by several different physicians without any benefit wintever, and they all told me that my hearing could never be restored.

"Four months ago I began treatment with the Home-Alo Medical Institute at 248 South Spring street, Los Angeles. With the first week's treatment my hearing improved and I had relief from those severe headaches for the first time in four years. I can now hear any ordinary conversation, and can truthfully say that I would not feel as I did before for $500d I would advise any and all suffering to consult the Homo-Alo Staff of Physicians and Surgeons, as they have given me instant and permanent relief, aid I have always found them to be gentlemen is well as physicians. For thetruth of the above statement I would be glad for any one to call upon me atmy residence at 216 kast Third street. Los Angeles.

If you can get the old vim. ambition and condence by putting yourself to do it? Are yon not unwise to drag away your life in misery antill health instead of checking the disease.

MEN who are suffering from nervous debility, contracted sliments, partial or complete loss of vital force, unnatural drains, blood polog, etc., will make no mistaks when consulting the physicians of this institute. They positively guarantee to cure ruplure, plies, varicose vein guicker than any physician in Galifornia or make no charge:

J. L. Edmonds of South Pasadena writes: "I want the public to know of the excellent method of treatment that has cured ms. I was a sufferer for years from nervous debility and infimmation of the prostite gland, brought about by excesses which caused a severe drain upon my stream. I think I would be a sufferor still had I not sought your aid. I spelt a great deal of money and valuable time treating with so-called specialists for men, who would promise anything to get my money, but I got worse at the time. However, the physicians of the Homo-Alo Medical Institute has relieved me of every one of my symptoms, and now I am thoroughly cured and enriched by perfect health. I have found them to be thorough gettemen as well as physicians, who do all and more tran they claim. I suffer severely both mentally and physically before going to them. My meetal ymptoms were caused by constant worry, brought on by my inability to finderilef. I had no energy and could not do mental or physical abor of any kind. On account of the drain on my system stopped and I beame a well as physicians and wold be gight feelin

THE WORLD'S PETROLEUM. Over 5,000,000,000 gallons of petroleum are now produced annually in the world, according to recently compiled statistics furnished by the Treasury Department Bureau of Statistics. Of this amount 2,500,000,000 are produced in the United States, 2,250,000,000 in Russia and the remainder is distributed among a 60zan countries, Austria producing $3,000,000, Sumatra 72,000,000, Java 30,000,000, Canada 29,000,000, Roumania GOZAM COUNTIES, Austria producing $7,000,000, Sumatra 72,000,000, Canada 29,000,000, Ana 30,000,000, Canada 29,000,000, Roumania 24,000,000, India 15,000,000, Japan 8,000,000, Germany 7,000,000 Peru 3,000,000, and Italy, about 1,000,000 gallons. While the United States and Russia furnish the bulk of the world's petroleum and stand, almost abreast in the quantity of crude oil produced, the amount of refined illuminating oil supplied by the United States is more than double that furnished by Russia. This is due to the fact that a given quantity of United States, oil produces three-fourths of its bulk in refined illuminating oil, while the same quantity of Russian oil produces only about three-eighths of its bulk in refined illuminating oil. Sumatra, next to Russia, is the most formidable competitor of the United States because of the fact that fits crude oils broduce half their quantity in refined iffuminating oil, and the further fact that they are much nearer to the Orlent the countries of which form an important part of the world's markets for this class of exporation. Up to the present time, however, the quantity of oil produced in Sumatra is small compared with that of the United States or Russia, its figures for 1897 being but 72,258,000 gallons. The United States, our total export to that country in the last fiscal specific on the United States, our total export to that country in the last fiscal specific on the United States on total export to that country in the last fiscal specific on the United States on total export to that country in the last fiscal specific on the United States on total export to that country in the last fiscal specific on the United States on total export to the country in the last fiscal specific on the United States in the year 1898 was 900,983,875 gallons, while Russia's exportation amounted to less than one-third this quality.

FUEL PETROLEUM. It is thought by many who use crude petroleum as fuel that there should be some means of ascertaining how much oil a purchaser is getting, and how pure it is. Some go so far as to claim that if no other way can be found then the city ought to establish an oil inspector whose business it would be to gauge the contents of every oil tank used to carry oil. No one exficept the owner knows the contents of a wagon tank, and the huyer cannot be sure how many barrels is delivered unless he has means of measuring for himself. As to purity it is marvelous how much water some oil will carry in globules so small no eye can clearly detect them. The oil held in suspense is in proportion to the specific gravity of the mass and by adding benzine to change the specific gravity the oil is separated from the water which settles to the bottom. This test is easily made. In some clases one-third of the mass is found to be water. FUEL PETROLEUM. It is thought

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKETS.

LOS ANGELES, July 1, 1899.

Receipts of poultry are free, but the demand a good. Fat stock, not too old, brings fairly s good. Fat stock, not too old, brings fairly steady prices.

Eggs are steady at 18% cents for fresh California ranch. Buyers pay 17% cents here for all offering, and in some instances that price is paid in the interior.

Butter can hardly be said to be firm at yesterday's advance. Fancy northern can be sold here at a fair profit at 45 cents, and so can fancy eastern. It will be somewhat inficult to keep local moving at 5 cents above these. Lower grades, even good butter, will hardly roap the full advantage of the rise. hardly reap the full advantage of the rise, and light-weight is as slow as ever. Some poor light-weight rolls, and there is not much and light-weight is as slow as ever. Some poor light-weight rolls, and there is not much on the market, sell at as low as 30 cents.

Potatoes do not develop any change.

Yellow Globe onions of fine quality are on the market. They are held at 80 cents.
Good pink beans cost nearly $2.25 to lay down here at this time. Poor, demaged stock is cheaper, but it does not sell here.

In fresh fruits there is no radical change.
Berries are all plentiful and selling at easy prices, as all the week. Peaches sold at the depot at 50 to 65 cents for fair to good and up to 75 cents for yellow. Pears are still so green that they are slow of sale. Plums went at 65 cents for fair red up to 85 for Tragedy prunes. Fine figs are 80 cents per box. Grapes brought $1.50 to $1.75 for while and $1.50 to $2 for black. Cherries sold at 90 cents to $1, and currants at 50 to 60 cents. Some less choice are said to have sold as low as 40 cents.

Prices below are for good shipping fruit in mall lots. There is an active demand from San Fran-mail lots.

There is an active demand from San Francisco for good dried fruit, and pretty free shipments are being made. Choice peaches sell at 11½ cents f. o. b. here. Stocks of all kinds are light, and prices are not much better than nominal as a rule.

At the close of the week there was the usual desire to clean up stocks pretty closely. Fruit ruled rather easy at the close. Eggs closed weak, some merchants freely offering California at 18 cents. The presence of eastern at 17½ cents for standard stock and 18 for extra select is the cause. The retail trade prefers the lower-priced goods in many cases, and in some depots fresh ranch accumulate. To prevent this the price is lower. One merchant states that on Monday he may be forced to put the price to 17½ cents to move his eggs.

Butter closes very weak. Not all local sells at the board price, 50 cents. A good deal here on commission is being sold at 47½ cents. The commission men say that at this time they do not feel like letting their stocks accumulate, and therefore put the price where the stuff will unove out.

NEW YORK MARKETS.

Shares and Money.
[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

NEW YORK, July 1,—The remarkable demand for the standard railroad stocks continued as strong today as it was yesterday, and applied to much the same stocks. Pennsylvania took the foremost place, both in respect to activity and strength. The stock showed the largest gain at the opening, and held its leadership without change throughout theday, closing at the top level, 3% points above last night's price. A study of the

The early strength was largely confined to the leading railroad stocks, but became general on the publication of the bank statement in covering by shorts who were disappointed on the market's failure to weaken. There was early weakness in the specialties on the injunction against the payment of dividends of Federal Steel stocks, and on talk of strikes on street railway lines, but disclaimers of an intention to strike by labor leaders and the strength of Sugar on the decline of raw sugars helped this department, as did the strength of Anaconda. Consolidated Gas was strong on talk of a settlement of the rate war. International Paper and American Smelting weakened sharply in the late transactions.

Bonds were moderately active and strong.

In the ordinary course of events the operators in stocks and securities are influenced by the expected, rather than by present conditions. Except when some sudden and unforeseen event is precipitated, the course of prices always reflects a forecast, and as far in the future as the operator is event is precipitated, the course of prices always reflects a forecast, and as far in the future as the operator is willing to rely on his judgment to penetrate. Thus the professional operators sold last week on the well-grounded belief that the course of events would inevitably lead to a squeeze in money July 1. This week, although the expected event had not occurred, stock market operators began to look beyond to the period of abundant money, which will come with the disbursement of July interests and dividends, and have bought stocks in anticipation of that condition. Operators who sold short last week, have also been buying this week to cover their contracts and take their profits, thus helping on the rising tendency. But the most important influence of the week was the strength of New York Central, corroborative as it was of the rumors of impending consolidations of Vanderbilt road interests. The successful result of the merging of the Lake Shore and the Michigan Central into the New York Central are already becoming apparent in higher efficiency and lower operating expenses. The railroads in which the Vanderbilts holdings are influential, form so vast a ramification, that comprehensive plans of consolidation, such as W. K. Vanderbilt is said to fear, is no less feasible considering the conditions and tendencies of the times, than was the original through line from New York to Chicago achieved by Commodore Vanderbilt. The wide-spread belief that the present Vanderbilt interests contemplate a transcontinental line, from Boston to the Pacific, was reflected this week by the sympathetic strength with New York Central was the most influential factor in inducing the buying of railroad stocks in anticipation of the western. Omaha, Union Pacific, Ore-gon Short Line securities and Ore-gon Navigation. The strength in New York Central was the most influential factor in inducing the buying of rail-road stocks in anticipation of the rise, which Wall street traders be-road stocks in anticipation of the rise, which Wall street traders believe is sure to come after July 1. The much improved condition of the ecountry's crops and the springing up of a dash demand for wheat and corn from domestic sources and also for export have also been influenced. The large grain movement being added to the already heavy freight movement of merchandise of all classes has brought the current railroad earnings up to unprecedented figures.

The attitude of London toward American securities has been very favorable. Buying from that source has been large during the week, and has made sufficient sterling exchange to effectually break the exchange market and preclude the likelihood of further shipments of gold.

The industrials generally have been in disfavor in the New York market during the week, and the movement in railroad stocks has separated itself from the industrials. Profit taking was induced to some extent by the stiffening of the money rate, but liquidation was not on a large scale and the histandard railroad stocks ended near the highest.

There has been an enlarged business in bonds and an advancing tendency in prices.

May report of earnings was the primary cause of the strength of this stock, but there were also rumors in circulation that the incursion of the New York Central into New England was to be followed by a similar move on the part of the Pennsylvania lease of the New Haven road. The sustaining strength of New York Central at its high level doubtless prompted some large buying of Pennsylvania, also paying 1 per cent. more per annum in dividends than New York Central at its high level doubtless prompted some large buying of Pennsylvania, also paying 1 per cent. more per annum in dividends than New York Central and selling so far under the latter. The extraordinary railroad earnings reported from every section of the that department of the Stock market. The Crangers were all in good demand, and gained a point or over in that department of the Stock market. The Crangers were all in good demand, and gained a point or over in the half days' trading. St. Paul led in point of activity, but Rock Island showed the largest gain in prices. Burlington felt the effect of profit-taking on the publication of the busy statement, showing an increase in the surplus for the month. The Union Pacific stocks enjoyed the benefit of a strong showing in the May statement.

NEW YORK, July 1.—The Financier says: "The statement of the associated banks for the week ending July 1 shows some of the heaviest changes in months, due not so much the unfavorable influences as to the operations of the half-yearly period. The three factors which have served to reduce the cash reserves by nearly eleven and one-half millions are the gold exports, treasury debts and the midsummer dividend period. Under present conditions, it may be said safely that no more gold will go to Europe unless an exceedingly fancy rate is paid for it. As for the treasury, it is known that for some time past the banks have been losing, steadily to the government, owing to the transfers of the deposits and the growing excess of customs payments over disbursements. This is a very satisfactory feature of the situation, showing as it does, a right to a period of normal business, but for the time being it is taking more or less money out of circulation. Beginning with July, however, the treasury will have heavy payments in the way of bonded interest and expenses to meet, and this will allow the banks to recoup some of their previous losses. In the same manner the institutions will begin to show the effect of the enormous July disbursements, and while the crop season is not far distant, it is to be expected that the money movement will continue this week for a time. An unusual incident has been the shipping of gold from New York to the interior during the past few days. Canada has also been drawing gold. That the banks, in the face of the continued drain upon their resources, are able to maintain their loans at the highest figures ever known, and still report, fourteen millions excess reserve, is regarded as abundant proof of their strength. How the statement will affect interest rates is not known, but since any material advance is certain to result in a rush of idle capital to this center, a stringency in the local market is regarded as highly improbable. The current statement shows that the larger banks, w

GENERAL EASTERN MARKETS

Grain and Provisions. [ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] [ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]
CHICAGO, July 1.—Wheat opened strong. Liverpool quoted a closing advance of about ½d, and a good many continental orders for wheat were on the market, not only for the cash article, but for futures. There were also reports of damage to crops on the continent, reporting continued heavy rains, while the weather was also reported in England as wet. General conditions in Europe were said to be favorable for a good demand for American wheat. The strong tone of foreign advices was really responded to by the local market, which was well loaded down with short wheat, and though advices was really responded to by the local market, which was well loaded down with short wheat, and though domestic receipts were still heavy and June deliveries large, the bulls at once assumed the aggressive and retained the upper hand throughout. Commission houses were good buyers and reports of winter wheat threshings in general were confirmatory of the claims of damage to the crop. September sold as high as 75% and closed at 75½@75%; July, 74; December, 77%.

Corn was steady but dull early. September closed with a gain of ½@%, at 34½@34%; July, 34½@34%; December, 34. Oats were extremely dull, but steady. September closed unchanged at 21%; July, 24½@24½; May, 23%.

Provisions showed considerable strength. The market opened higher and advanced, closing firm at about top prices. At the close September pork was 12½c higher; lard, 2½@5c higher; and ribs 5@7½c higher; lard, 2½@5c higher; and ribs 5@7½c higher; Irde will be held until Wednesday.

If you bought an alarm clock for 49c and found the works of it to be partially lead, you would waste the 49c. If you bought one of our alarm clocks for 75c and found the works to be entirely of brass, and the clock to be the same as jewelers sell for $1.25, you would save 50c. Your buying would be economical and safe. Every sale slip written here is a guarantee that the goods are sold in good faith and worth the price paid. You are made doubly safe by our willingness to trade back the money paid, or other merchandise for any article you may wish to return, if in returnable condition. To charge high, or even usual prices, would be a blunder, and this Great Store could not have grown on a blundering policy. Our buying organization is constantly broadening and expanding. It is securing goods closer and closer to their first cost, but there is a limit to our buying, and that 7 limit is "trash." There we stop. The alarm In Buying Here You clock incident illustrates it. It also illustrates that In Buying Here You

It is natural to associate "Hamburgers" with thoughts of cotton dress fabrics, for there isn't such another gathering of them on the whole Coast. Every store sells percales and ginghams 7 and organdies; each year the mills bring out hundreds upon hundreds of new designs, Lucky if one new thing in a score is really charming. There is almost no reservation in the # statement that producers give us first choice, and in hundreds of cases confine patterns to this k house. There is a difference—a beauty difference—in wash fabrics of all classes. Hence, leadership. There are decided bargains here too.

THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

EVER, in the history of the American republic, has there been so great reason for an appreciative celebration of the Fourth of July as there is this year. The Fourth is, beyond all other days, the day on which American patriotism, pure and simple, proclaims itself. Patriotism, it is true, enters into the celebration of Memorial day and of Washington's birthday, but in those days it is only an important element, not the exclusive sentiment, as on the "glorious Fourth."

The Fourth of July has come to mean more than exultation over independence from British sovereignty. It celebrates not merely the success of the armies led by Washington, but victories over problems of statesmanship, of finance, of political policy, over foes within as well as without; victories in the fields of scholarship, of invention, of diplomacy, of civilization, of human liberty; in short, it celebrates all our achievements as a nation, in peace as well as in war, and all that goes to promote happy and prosperous and useful living.

This year, however, there are reasons for enthusiasm in our patriotism such as never have existed before. We have, since the last Fourth of July, consummated the conquest over Spanish arms on land and on sea, and have proven to an incredulous world that there is a mighty nation here beyond the sea that puts humanity above selfishness, justice above the blessings of peace, and will not stand idly by and permit cruel tyranny and oppression to crush the feeble and defenseless. Great as has been the victory of the nation's arms, its moral victory has been far greater. The mere fact of the success of physical force has but little to commend it; but the triumph of a righteous purpose, when such triumph involves the sacrifice of life and treasure, is something sublime. It is such a victory which enters into the spirit of the celebration of our Independence day this year as an added motive to all that has made the day great heretofore.

And while we have been undergoing all the exactions incident to raising, arming and equipping an army and placing it in distant fields, this great nation has moved majestically onward, not only unembarrassed by financial or commercial difficulties, but enjoying material prosperity such as it has seldom experienced in its history. So far as the people at home have been affected in their material resources, or their commercial or industrial progress, the war has been an incident of comparatively slight importance. This fact alone is sufficient proof of the stability of the foundation upon which our forefathers built.

We have entered, too, upon a new era of national unity. Never before since the close of the revolutionary war, have the people of this country been bound together by such a strong feeling of compatriotism and fraternity as they are today. North and South, East and West, practically without a break in the ranks, march shoulder to shoulder, an irresistible phalanx in the battle for human rights, for upholding the "righteousness which exalteth a nation." contest against tyranny, so gloriously begun on American soil more than a century ago, has carried its conquest to the islands of the sea, and in so doing has created a stronger unity at home. The same iron in the blood that made the conflict between the States, more than a third of a century ago, so determined and so desperate, now binds North and South together in a happy, harmonious fellowship, and we have in fact as well as in name, a "new birth of freedom," and a new cause for triumphant rejoicing that we are citizens of "the land of the free and the home

THE LESSONS OF TODAY.

ORTY thousand more men for the Philippines—forty thousand of the advance guard of Freedom! It costs something to carry civilization into barbarous fields, and the gospel of enlightenment into the dark corners of the earth. But the twentieth century of this Christian era is going to see a general uplifting of benighted peoples, and in the work of that uplifting this great, free, American republic is destined to take as active a part as any of the civilized nations of the globe. Providence has not been training us in the school of Freedom for the past century without some purpose. He has not made freedom as essential to us as the air we breathe without having some high end in view, outreaching beyond ourselves, and affecting the good of the race. Isolate we can no longer be, and American manhood is ready for the demand made upon it, and the sacrifice which it may have to offer.

No truer is it that "the blood of martyrs is the seed of the church," than that the blood of our American soldiers in Cuba, and the distant Philippines, is the seed of freedom for those lands. Every American soldier who falls is an immortal hero, a martyr to Liberty, and he does not die in vain. There is no turning back for us. There is no such thing as giving up the fight, but we must battle until the right triumphs and those lands are made ready for the march of enlightened Progress.

We are, in a larger sense than ever, an object lesson to other civilized powers. France, torn by internal strife and dissensions; Russia, on the verge of bankruptcy and ruin; Germany, restless and jealous of our strength, and England, great in her imperial grandeur, are all looking in open-eyed wonder at this less than a century and a quarter old republic, and marveling at the vastness of its achievements, and they are realizing, as never before, the strength, the power, the intelligence and the overmastering love of freedom which is the heritage of a sovereign people, and when this war is over the spirit of republicanism will have advanced a hundredfold. The civilized world is making ready for it. Thrones are growing weaker, and the one-man power pales before the invincible might of a sovereign people. The great lessons that Providence is teaching the world today are lessons that will tell powerfully upon the future, and they will be as wide-reaching in their influence as any that the world has ever learned, for they are lessons that will tend to a recognition of the strength of human sovereignty, and the weakness of autocratic rule. Into the slow, plodding mind of the toiling and oppressed this truth will gradually creep, and the semi-barbaric hordes of the great Philippine Archipelago will not be blind to it much longer. As our armies move across the great seas the world looks on and it respects the old flag as it never did before. Well may we denominate it "Old Glory," for it is like the pillar of fire that went before the Israelites on their march to the promised land, a signal of triumph, a sign that Jehovah led them onward.

And that He is with the American people today in this war for humanity, who can doubt? Not once since the opening of the war with Spain and in all our struggle in the Philippines have our forces failed to be victorious, and that, too, without heavy losses on our part. And when God fights for us Freedom will win, and American flag, and for all that goes to make that the might of American principles will triumph.

E E E - E - E E E TO AVOID WAR. A GLANCE AT THE DEVELOPMENT OF ARBITRATION AMONG NATIONS.

By a Special Contributor.

RBITRATION, rather than disarmament, has been made the leading subject and phase of the International Peace Congress at The Hague, and it will doubtless remain so. This change in the original plan has made the United States and Great Britain the foremost influences in the congress, because these two most influences in the congress, because these two countries have both preached and practiced arbitration as the most sensible and most Christian mode of settling international differences. The failure of the American Congress to ratify the arbitration treaty made with Great Britain several years ago has only stimulated the friends of that policy to fresh, more detormined efforts; and the slow progress of the many-obstacted Canadian arbitration has served to reveal the advantages of effective arbitration rather than to discourage its promotion.

It is the proud privilege of Americans to say that advantages of effective arbitration rather than to discourage its promotion.

It is the proud privilege of Americans to say that their nation has been first in working for the permanent establishment of international arbitration in modern times. Great Britain has been no less prominent in practicing the principle. Before enlarging upon this point it may be well to glance at the earlier history of arbitration. Darius once arbitrated a dispute between Artabazanes and Xerxes, deciding in favor of the latter. The Greeks often resorted to arbitration, but only among themselves, for they regarded foreigners as barbarians. Nor did they include political questions in such settlements. Religion, commerce, boundaries and the possession of contested territory were thus submitted. Rome never consented to arbitrate her disputes with foreign countries. The Senate at first, and the Emparor finally, set up as absolute arbitrators of all claims. "In one case," says a recent writer, "the Romans were arbitrators of some questions of boundary between the Aricians and the people of Ardea, and they decided the point at issue by seizing the disputed territory themselves."

between the Aricians and the people of Ardea, and they decided the point at issue by seizing the disputed territory themselves."

In the Middle Ages the church excited a great influence. The Roman pontiffs "constituted themselves judges of all cases and evoked to their tribunal all differences between people and kings." It was Pope Alexander VI who traced, acting as arbitrator, an imaginary line from pole to pole, dividing between Spain and Portugal the possession of all countries discovered in the New World. The monarchs of Europe frequently acted as arbitrators and occasionally a city assumed the duties. the dutics.

First Trial of Arbitration by This Country

The first Trial of Arbitration by This Country

The first trial of arbitration by the United States was under the Jay treaty, made with Great Britain in 1794.
This treaty provided for three mixed commissions, which were to settle respectively the following points:
A dispute as to what river was intended under the name of the River St. Croix, which was specified under the peace treaty of 1793 as forming part of our northeastern boundary. It was decided that the Schoodac was the river intended.
The second commission was organized to determine

was the river intended.

The second commission was organized to determine the compensation due to British subjects because of impediments that certain of the United States had interposed to the collection of bona fide debts by British creditors. This commission "broke up in a row," so to speak; and the claims which it failed to adjust were settled under a treaty concluded in 1802, by which Great Brita'n accepted $3,000,000 in satisfaction of its demands.

The third commission was able, better disposed and more patient. It considered several important questions of law, such as contraband, the rights of neutrals more patient. It considered several important questions of law, such as contraband, the rights of neutrals and the decisions of prize courts.

The Treaty of Ghent, which ended the war of 1812, provided for three arbitrations. The first related to certain islands in Passamaquaddy Bay, and the others to the northern and northeastern boundary lines between this country and Canada.

In 1853 a convention was concluded at London for a general settlement of claims pending between the United States and Great Britain.

The Treaty of Washington, signed in May, 1871, by this commtry and Great Britain, composed the controversies growing out of the civil war, the northeastern fisheries, and the disputed San Juan water boundary. Prof. John B. Moore says: "The right of this treaty to be regarded as the greatest treaty of arbitration the world has ever seen, was only emphasized by the fact that it provided for four distinct arbitrations, the largest number ever established under a single convention." The first was the Geneva conference, which adjusted the "Alabama claims," awarding the United States the sum of $15,500,000. The dispute as to the San Juan water boundary was referred to the Emperor of Germany, who rendered, on October 21, 1872, an award in favor of the United States. Claims of British subjects against Great Britain (excepting the Alabama claims,) growing out of the civil war, were referred to a mixed commission. The fourth arbitration was to fix the compensation due to Great Britain for privileges accorded under the Treaty of Washington to the United States in the northeastern fisheries. Great Britain was awarded $5,500,000.

More Recent Arbitration.

More Recent Arbitration

tion with Great Britain is s fresh in the minds of the people. England came off first best in the case.

Our differences with France have usually been set tled by direct negotiations, but a mixed commission arbitrated the claims of French citizens growing out of our civil war and of American citizens growing out of our civil war and of American citizens growing out of the Franco-Prussian war. With Spain we have had four arbitrations. The first was under the treaty of 1795, relating to claims for illegal captures of vessels by Spanish subjects. The second considered claims growing out of the insurrection in Cuba. It began in 1871, and was not finally concluded until 1882. The third arbitration related to the selzure of the steamer Lloyd Aspinwall by the Spanish in 1870. The fourth submitted the question of damages to be paid by Spain for the wrongful selzure of the American bark Masonic. We have had two arbitrations with Mexico, and the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, signed in 1848, imposed the sincere consideration of arbitration as a means of settling any differences that might arise.

The United States has had three arbitrations with Hayti, with Venezuela two, with Colombia two, with Portugal two, and with Chile, Brazil and Denmark one Portugal two, and with Chile, Brazil and Denmark one each.

Reference has already been made to the fact that the United States and Great Britain lead the world in settling differences in this manner. Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood, in the Review of Reviews, points out that the United States has arbitrated about forty cases; Great Britain not less than thirty. The United States has settled differences in this way with sixteen nations, thirteen of which are weak powers; Great Britain with eleven, six of which are weak powers. The two countries have settled thirteen disputes between themselves in this manner, some of which were the most delicate, difficult and far-reaching of all the cases ever adjusted by arbitration.

During a period of three-fourths of a century, beginning in 1798, with the Jay treaty, and ending in 1872, with the settlement of the Alabama claims, there have been about thirty-five settlements of international differences by arbitration. Either the United States or Great Britain has appeared as a party in all of these except three. In the forty-five cases that have occurred since 1872, one or the other of these two nations has appeared as a party twenty times.

Official Recognition in Great Britain.

In 1873 the House of Commons adopted, by the casting vote of the Speaker, a resolution formally approving of the principle of arbitration. "This was," says Dr. Trueblood, "the first general official recognition of the principle ever given by a national legislative body, the resolution of the same kind introduced by Charles Sumner in the United States Senate the year before having got no further than the order to refer and print."

Still further strength was given the growing arbitra-

having got no further than the order to refer and print." Still further strength was given the growing arbitration movement in 1887, by the visit of a distinguished British deputation bearing a numerously-signed memorial, to which was added the International American Conference of 1889-90, called by the Secretary of State. An arbitration treaty was drawn by this conference, but it failed of ratification. The failure to ratify, however, did not grow out of any opposition to the principle of arbitration on the part of the Senate. Indeed, Congress had previously adopted unanimously a resolution approving of that principle. Then, in 1893, the House of Commons passed a similar resolution by a unanimous vote. unanimous vote.

It is very easy to understand from this record how it has come to pass that the United States and Great Eritain are standing side by side urging the indorsement and adoption of arbitration by all the great nations of the world, in a manner that shall make the operation of the principle certain and effective.

Interesting Resolutions.

It is interesting to note the text of the latest resolu-

It is interesting to note the text of the latest resolution referred to in the foregoing, passed by the Congress and the House of Commons, respectively. Following is the resolution adopted by Congress:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring, that the President be, and is hereby requested to invite from time to time, as fit occasions may arise, negotiations with any government with which the United States have or may have diplomatic relations, to the end that any differences or disputes that may arise between the two governments which cannot be adjusted by diplomatic agency may be referred to arbitration and be peaceably adjusted by such means."

The British House of Commons, on July 16, 1893,

The British House of Commons, on July 16, 1893, adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, that this house has learned with satisfaction that both houses of the United States Congress have, by resolution, requested the President to invite from time to time, as fit occasions may-arise, negotiations with any government with which the United States have or may have diplomatic relations, to the end that any differences or disputes arising, between the two governments which cannot be adjusted by diplomatic agency, may be referred to arbitration and peaceably adjusted by such means; and that this house, cordially sympathizing with the purpose in view, expresses the hope that, Her Majesty's government will lend their ready coöperation to the government of the United States upon the basis of the foregoing resolution."

United States upon the basis of the foregoing resolution."

Nor should the "plan of a permanent tribunal of arbitration, adopted by the International American Conference (composed of delegates from North, Central and South America, and commonly known as the Pan-American Cenference,) April 18, 1890," be forgotten. The plan sets forth that the republica represented adopt arbitration as a principle of American international law for the settlement of the differences, disputes or controversies that may arise between two or more of them; and stipulates that arbitration shall be obligatory in all controversies concerning diplomatic and consular privileges, boundaries, territories, indemnities, the right of navigation, and the validity, construction and enforcement of treaties.

The last great movement to promote arbitration held in this country was "The American Conference on International Arbitration," called specifically to promote the establishment of a permanent system of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain. It was composed of nearly three hundred members from thirty-six States and one Territory, and was held in Washington, D. C., April 22 and 23, 1896. The idea originated in Chicago, and soon spread to New York, Philadelphia and other large cities of the Union. John W. Foster was temporary chairman and ex-Senator Edmunds president of the convention, and many celebrated men from all parts of the country were present. Some valuable addresses were made, but the important part of from all parts of the country were present. Some val-uable addresses were made, but the important part of the proceedings was the report of the Committee on Resolutions.

The preamble sets forth the evils of war. It is then declared that religion, humanity and justice, as well as the material interests of civilized society, demand the immediate establishment between the United States immediate establishment between the United States and Great Britain of a permanent system of arbitration; and the earliest possible extension of such a system to embrace all civilized nations. It is earnestly recommended to our government, as soon as it is assured of a corresponding disposition on the part of the British government, to negotiate a treaty providing for the widest practicable application of the method of arbitration to international controversies. It is further resolved that a committee of the conference be appointed to prepare and present to the President of the United States a memorial urging the taking of such steps on the part of this country, as will best conduce to the end in view.

On May 14, 1896, the designated committee presented the resolutions to President Cleveland, together with an appropriate memorial. The President, in response, expressed himself as being heartily in sympathy with the spirit and aim of the resolutions. Mr. Uleveland's sentiments were heartily indorsed by Secretary of State the spirit and aim of the resolutions. Mr. Uleveland's sentiments were heartily indorsed by Secretary of State Olney.

President McKinley is, of course, in full accord with the purpose and general plan of international arbitration, and his choice of delegates to the Peace Congress, now in session at The Hague, has given the United States a very able representation there.

The British plan for the creation of an international arbitration tribunal proposes that "each of the signatory States, number not prescribed, shall be pledged to submit to the approval of the other States the names of two persons, with the necessary qualifications, vacancies to be filled in like manner. These are to be ex-officion members of the tribunal. From these members each litigant in any case is to select as many judges as may be stipulated for in the arbitration agreement with the other litigant, and each is to have the further right to name one or more judges waose names are not on the list. In this way the bench in each case is to be constituted."

The immunity of private property from capture at sea in time of war, is a subject that will be pushed by the American commissioners to The Hague conference. The proposal is not a new one. J. S. Tucker, writing to the New York Sun, presents a very interesting history of this phase in international relations. The first externation to propulgate the idea that you combattant.

tory of this phase in international relations. The first statesman to promulgate the idea that non-combatants should be exempted in their persons and property from the evils of war was Benjamin Franklin, who, in 1783, proposed that the following clause should be inserted in the treaty of peace with Great Britain:

"And all merchants or traders, with their unarmed vessels, employed in commerce, exchanging the products of different places, and thereby rendering the necessary conveniences and comforts of human life more easy to obtain and more general, shall be allowed to pass freely, unmolested."

Approved by Thomas Jefferson.

Approved by Thomas Jefferson.

The clause was not made a part of the treaty, but the next year it appeared, almost word for word, in the report of a committee of which Thomas Jefferson was chairman, appointed by Congress "to draft instructions to our ministers relative to the formation of commercial treaties with European powers." This report was adopted by Congress, and the "new gospel of immunity became known as the American doctrine. In 1785, a treaty was concluded with Prussia, then under Frederick the Great, which contained and accepted the American doctrine. This treaty expired by limitation in 1795. No other country would agree to the immunity clause, probably because the great naval powers did not wish to give up the advantage of being able to cripple an enemy's commerce in time of war. So the United States was finally forced to give up the policy and engage in privateering in time of war. It is interesting to know that Emperor Napoleon frequently expressed his approval of the American doctrine.

In 1823 President Munroe sought to interest the governments of France, Russia and Great Britain in a proposal to abolish private war on the sea. Polite but noncommittal replies were received, and nothing was accomplished.

We now come to the Treaty of Paris in 1856, following

We now o complished.

We now come to the Treaty of Paris in 1856, following the Crimean war, which was signed by most of the great powers of Europe, and which remains still in force. It covers the following principles:

"First—Privateering is and remains abolished.
"Second—The neutral flag covers enemy's goods, with the exception of contraband of war.

"Third—Neutral goods, with the exception of contraband of war, are not liable to capture under enemy's flag.

"Fourth—Blockades, in order to be binding, must be effective."

The signatory powers agreed to ask other nations to join with them. On the part of the United States, Secretary Marcy was directed to say, on behalf of President Pierce, the Paris Congress fell short of the desired result by not placing individual effects of belligerents beyond the reach of public armed vessels as well as privateors. The President, therefore, proposed that the following words shauld be added to the first proposition in the declaration of Paris: "And that the private property of the subjects or citizens of a belligerant on the high seas shall be exempt from seizure by public armed vessels of the other belligerent, except it be contraband."

No decisive action was taken on this amendment, and the United States never signed the treaty. In 1861, Secretary Seward, foreseeing the great injury that Confederate privateers might inflict on our commerce, tried to open negotiations with the great powers for the adoption by the United States of the Treaty of Paris, the latter to waive its own proposal to exempt private property from capture altogether. The English and French governments took the ground that "the Confederate States, being acknowledged as a belliegrent, might, by the law of nations, arm privateers, and that their privateers must be regarded as the armed vessels of a belligerent;" and so the matter was dropped. In the late war with Spain the United States formally acknowledged the Treaty of Paris, but Spain did not.

THE REJECTED CONTRIBUTOR.

[Thomas Wentworth Higginson, in Harper's Bazar:] The one thing which the rejected contributor is apt to forget is that the editor, of all persons, is unable to have personal friends or foes, and that the whole purpose of high being is to make his periodical a magnetic process. nis being is to make his periodical a success according to its own standard. There is not an editor in America who can afford to gratify his private likes and dislikes at the expense of his magazine. Moreover, the contributor may be sure of this—that every editor is hungering and thirsting for novelties all the time; he knows that his best contributors may be growing old or growing dull or may be bought away by some rival, and that his best contributors may be growing old of growing dull, or may be bought away by some rival, and that he must be looking toward the future. He yearns for new talent. Of course this temptation may lead to hastiness and transient idols. "Chimmie Fadden" and "Mr. Dooley" are as available while they last as Kipling, even if Kipling be not, as some think, a skyrocket rather than a harbor light; but it is desirable in the long run that the editor should be a man of sense, and that he should have his own way. and that he should have his own way.

HOUSES AND HOMES.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF TASTE AND EXPRESSION IN ARCHITECTURE.

By a Special Contributor.

MONG all the ancient religions there is none that has a wider ground of reasonableness, from the A standpoint of our present knowledge, than the worship of fire. The source of light and life, it was the torch at which civilization was kindled, and the sacred fire of the Romans that was kept burning on the altar of the goddess of home was a survival of the innate recognition of fire as a civilizer.

Before the knowledge of fire, man roamed the earth

Before the knowledge of fire, man roamed the earth raked, with no implement but that afforded by nature in the dry branch of a tree or the stone shaped to the band. Fire furnished him with metallic weapons that made him king over the beasts, and gave him pottery, which in turn necessitated a fixed habitation.

All national life is the expression of the influence of home. Nations are aggregate families, and the home is the sanctuary where the principles which govern society are fostered and where civilization is molded. Written history deals mainly with the rise, progress and decay of dynasties and the public life of rulers. Unwritten history is the rich and varied domestic life of mankind, and it comprises all that is best in the development of the race.

In studying architecture we are impressed with the comprehensiveness of its expression of the intellectuality of nations. Public buildings, temples and tombs of kings are mutely eloquent of the aspirations and memories of nations, as the house in which man dwells is an unconscious index to the unwritten domestic history of the race from which he sprung.

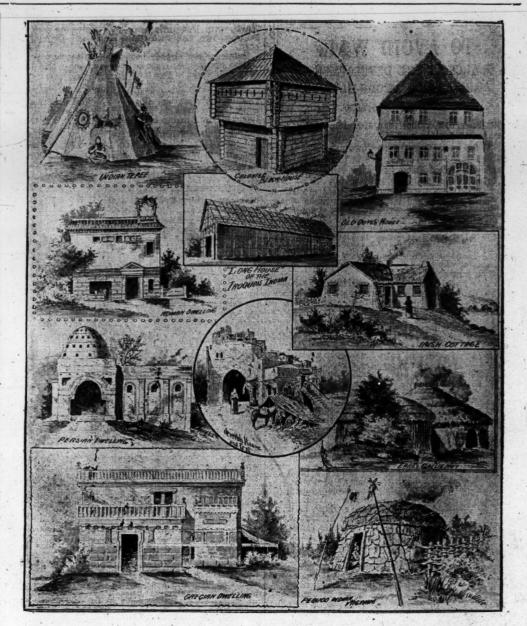

ries of nations, as the house in which man dwells is an the naconscious index to the unwritten domestic history of the race from which he sprung.

Man's first dwelling was a cave in the earth, but he is essentially a house-building animal, and wherever nature places him he constructs for himself an artificial shelter. When fire enabled him to fashion household utensils, he no longer built a new shelter of twigs and leaves for each night's rest, but made it substantial enough to serve him for longer periods. The tepee of skins or the thatched hovel became the center about which were clustered fruits and grains that were cultivated for food, and animals that furnished milk and fissh. Thus agriculture arose, preceded by the nomadic shepherd state. Where timber was not plentiful, suitable material for building was found in the clay which furnished material for pottery. It is likely that man had long before this built shelters and defenses of stones piled one upon the other, and found that their irregularity of shape made them unstable, and in fashioning his blocks of clay made their surfaces as smooth as possible, and when they were piled in courses plastered them all over, inside and out, with mud.

Masonry Without Mortar.

Dry building with stones reached a high state of perfection in many countries the lines walls of Pern still.

Dry building with stones reached a high state of perfection in many countries, the Inca walls of Peru, still standing, being the most remarkable example of this sort of work. So perfectly constructed is this dry-built wall that a knife blade cannot be inserted between the stones that compose it. In Mashonaland, South Africa, similar walls, artistically ornamented and solidly built, have been recently discovered.

The lodge of skins suggested the fundamental principle of perfected architecture, and has its kinshlp with St. Peter's and Westminster Abbey, just as the savage man was the prototype of the man of today. The poles bet up and covered with skins, approaching one another at the top, gave rise to the pointed arch of the primitive builders, which in turn was the parent of the true-curved arch. This latter form of arch was born late in the history of architecture, compared with the hoary age of the art, for the Egyptians knew nothing of it, and the Assyrians were the first to use it.

Before the dwellers in the Nile Valley were conquered by foreigners, they built their homes of reeds, plastered over with river mud, binding bundles of them together as door-posts for their huts. The conquerors came from a country where stone abounded, and they hewed for themselves homes in the rock, arching the roofs, and thus indicating that they had long been builders. They subjected the Egyptians, forced their culture upon them, and left memorials everywhere in the country. Various theories of the origin of these conquerors are put forward by historians. Many believe that they were the ancestors of the Phoenicians, the greatest builders of antiquity, and that this great nation bequeathed to the world a heritage whose written history was destroyed by the ruthless Roman, as the Druidic history of Britain was destroyed by the fanaticism of the early Christian missionaries. Future archaeologists may discover the link which connects the Phoenicians with the ruins in Mashonaland and in Central America, and may bring to light the long-buried history of this dead nation.

The rock-hewn tombs of Egypt, wonderful as they are, cannot be considered more so than the cliff-dwellings of our Southwest. The theory once held that these were the work of foreign builders has been completely disproven, and it has been shown that men in all countries, widely sundered and having no possible communication, develop intellectually in exactly the same manner, notwithstanding the difference of race types: Springing from a common ancestry, men are really all of one race, the variations caused by environment being no refutation of the theory of their inherent capacity for development.

Expetian Memories Preserved.

Egyptian Memories Pre

When the Egyptian, complying with the laws of his conquerors, built his house of stone and mortar, he preserved in these materials the memory of his mudplastered hut, with its bundle of reeds at the door, and the lotus-flower pillar became the ornament of architecture. Modified by Greek imagination, this pillar became the support of the loveliest temples of the Greek gods, as the Egyptian religion formed the basis of the lofty and poetic nature-worship of the Greeks.

The pyramids are not so eloquent of the engineering skill of the architects who planned them and the glory of the kings who caused them to be built, as of the patience of the common men of those days. With no tools except those of an alloy of tin and copper, easily dulled and broken, they drilled holes of uniform depth in the limestone rock, and in these openings they inserted seeders of very dry wood. They then wet the wedge overly, and their drying split the rock. With weden levers hardened in kilns they pried the huge shall from their places and smoothed them by hand with stone planes. Infinite labor, suffering and sorrow, are wrought into the great monuments of the Nile Valley, and while the names of the proud builders have been forgotten, the work of the oppressed slave remains a living witness to all the ages of the cruelty of his con-querors.

The Soudanese house of today is a lineal descendant of the old Egyptian dwelling. Modified somewhat by Arabic influence, it has the flat roof, approached by an inclined plane, and the general features of the dwelling clined plane, and the general features of the dwelling prescribed by the Egyptian laws.

The Hebrews were a pastoral people, and have never been famous as artisans. They were so inferior as builders that they employed the Phoenicians to build the palaces and tempes of Jerusalem, and their dwellings were modified by Egyptian influence.

The Assyrians early came in contact with the Medes and Persians, and from them learned many notable principles of building. The curved arch and the pillar were distinctive of their architecture. Where they learned the first whether from Phoenicians or Egyptians, is uncertain, but the great tree that was the favorite shelter of the Aryan tent, and later the central support of his wooden house, the "roof tree," was the ancestor of the pillars of the palaces of Persepolis and Babylon alike. This same idea was developed in Central America, Peru and Mexico, and probably from the same source. the same source.

Houses of the Greeks and Romans. The Greeks, being Aryans, naturally embodied in their houses the best memories of the ancient builders of their race. Pillars of stone took the place of wooden columns, and the cornice, with its rich and beautiful carving reminded the Greek that the roof of his an-cestors was supported by logs hewn from the forest and projecting over the perpendicular of the walls. The general interior plan of their dwellings was that of the ancient Afyan, yet the Greeks did not content them-selves with mere imitations of old forms, or with copying the architecture of the nations with whom they came in contact. They adapted the building material which they possessed to the highest artistic uses, discarding everything that was inharmonious. Simplicity was the keynote of their art and their lives.

The Romans lacked the intellectual loftiness of the Greeks, and their houses indicated their character. As they grew rich and brought luxuries from every part of the known world, they built their houses of stone, brick, plaster and wood, in a combination of all forms of architecture that were then developed. Fine paint ings, marbles and carvings enriched the interiors, and conveniences unknown to the Greeks added to their comfort. When Nero was building the stately Rome that replaced the old city that was burned during his reign, and was beasting that civilization was complete, the Aryans of Northern Europe still lived in hovels like those of their remote ancestors.

The Britons wove the framework of their houses of colors and thatched them with mud. The Branks will

The Britons wove the framework of their houses of osiers, and thatched them with mud. The Franks built their uncleanly huts of sticks, plastered with clay, and the Paris of the old Frankish kings did not equal, in architectural excellence, a Mandan Indian village. The Romans carried new ideas of building to all the nations of Northern Europe. The Teutonic tribes, in their migrations, took with them their domestic animals, and these were sheltered at night under their woodenwheeled carts. When they settled in agricultural communities, a thatched hut on stilts typlfied their memory of these wanderings, and under the hut, as under the of these wanderings, and under the hut, as under the primitive wagon, the horses and cattle were folded at night. Later, stable and dwelling were built adjoining, and these thatched Gallic huts, clustered together for defense against enemies, brute and human, formed the nucleus for the walled city of feudal days.

The Sargerie Seen in California

The Saracenic Seen in California.

No European architecture has received more attention from historians than the Saracenic. The people of the Southwest are especially interested in this form of building, and some of our loveliest California homes are patterned after Saracenic models. In its typical form Saracenic architecture was the idealized Arabic palace, the survival of the tent life of the race. The delicate arabesques, brilliant mural decorations and pavements of colored marble, were the perpetuation in stone of the rich stuffs and carpets with which the chiefs deco: ated their domiciles, and their embowering gardens recalled the happy oases, where their philoso-phers and poets drew wisdom and inspiration from the beauty that walked hand in hand with death.

The Mongolians retain the form of house that pre vailed among their ancestors, and as people of Turanian origin long dominated Russia, the domestic architecture origin long dominated Russia, the domestic architecture of that country has little of the Aryan in its composition. What is not Tartar is Byzantine, and that form does not commend itself to our sense of beauty. The Russians substitute timber for cane in framing their houses, and Peter the Great, in building his capital upon the Neva, set new fashions for the Russians. Modern styles now prevail among the culturel classes, but the thatched cottage is still found everywhere, and the log house is as common as it once was in America. The natives of the Pacific islands construct remarkable houses, the people of the Caroline group being especially clever builders. The long, sloping roof projects like a hood over the low wal's, and the workmanship is artistic and excellent. Conical and cylindrical huts are found in many of the South Sea groups, ideas.

but in others European influence has modified native

As for our own house-building, it is certain that America in the course of time will produce a characteristic architecture. It will not, however, be original, in the ordinary acceptation of that term, as an criginal art is only possible to a pure-blooded race, that has long inhabited a country, and has traditions preserved for centuries. Heterogeneous in our national life, our art will be conglomerate, but it will preserve all that was best in the dwellings of all the nations that have contributed to our nationality, and adapt to our needs all that is in harmony with our environment. all that is in harmony with our environment

"OLD MAN DODGE." HOW THE BOYS GOT A FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION, AFTER ALL.

Contributed by a Los Angeles Boy.

HEN I was a boy there lived in our town a certain miserly, much-avoided old fellow named Caleb Dodge, who for some unknown reason had grudge against boys that had grown with his year He had come to our village some eight years before bought a little farm near the edge of the town, and built a small cabin on the only hill of any size in our part of the country. We boys disliked him from the first, for this hill was our chief delight in winter, and he was too "grouchy" to let us play there after he came. He never appeared in any public gathering, and only a few people made any pretense of getting acquainted with him.

We learned, I don't know just how, but in that way which people living in a small town always do learn all of their neighbors' affairs, that he was very well off, and people who talked with him expressed the opinion that he had a "lot o' book larnin'." Such was Caleb

Dodge, old, eccentric, well-off, and a lonely old man.
Various little tiffs that we boys had with him made it seem that we hated him, but in reality we had no hard feelings, as the events following show.

The pride of Lincoln, our town, had long been its Fourth of July celebrations. Being the center of a prosperous district and boasting several wealthy men, it had always produced its best on that holiday. This year, however, owing, so they said, to the hard times and the high price of pylotechnic displays, the city fathers had decided to do away with the regular celebration.

The boys and that crowd of peddlers, fakirs and hangers on that are always in evidence on such occasions held up their hands in horror. "No celebration! No fireworks! No parade!" cried the boys. "No crowds, no farmer-boys with money to spend! No rich hauls!" cried the crowd aforementioned. And although the wise fathers and mothers nodded their heads at the plan and tried to console the boys with promise of better things next year we have would not be consoled.

plan and tried to console the boys with promise of better things next year, we boys would not be consoled.

A party of us gathered at "our cave" and held an indignation maeting. "No cannons nor bombs; think of it!" exclaimed Clarence James, a blood-thirsty youth whose ambition was to be a pirate. "No picnic in the grove; just imagine!" cried "Stuffy" Black. "No horse areas nor shooting matches: by my guns and fish-grove; just imagine!" cried "Stuffy" Black. "No horse races, nor shooting matches; by my guns and fishhooks!" cried Gerald Simmons, our sporting man. "No torpeders, nuther," sniffed little "Pieface" Smithers, whereat the boys laughed.

Various subjects, all centering on the Fourth that we weren't going to have, were discussed, till at length some one suggested that we play Indians. This was an old and favorite game, in which three or four of the boys were whites and the rest Indians. The whites were given "1000 by fives" to make good their escape, and it was no "baby-game" to hunt them out and then make them surrender.

and it was no "baby-game" to hunt them out and then make them surrender.

Harry Benton, who, as the oldest boy in our "gang," was a sort of leader, started toward a small tract of hazel brush near by, in search of the hiding whites, and I followed him. Now these bushes were a favorite hiding-place in this game, for all around them a ditch had been dug and the dirt thrown up onto the inner side, thus making a rather steep embankment, which afforded a good hiding and fighting place.

Harry, who was ahead, had just reached the ditch when he suddenly haited and turned to me with his finger on his lips. I stood on the instant, and heard a voice on the other side saying, as if asking a question, "—where the stuff 's kept."

"Yes," answered a rough voice. "The old fool sleeps on it. Bill found that it's in his mattress. He will have to be moved, but I don't think he'll make us much trouble, and then 10,000 apiece and it's done."

We stood perfectly still, listening and hardly breathing. Then the first speaker said, "What if he fights, or somebody comes up?"

"Then every fellow for himself, and the devil take him as gets the worst on it. Are you with us?"

"Tomorrow night, about 9:30 o'clock."

"I am you het your hooks!"

"When?"

"Tomorrow night, about 9:30 o'clock."

"I am, you bet your boots!"

"Shake!" said the gruff voice, and then it added,
"Now here's luck and confusion to Dodge."

That was all we wanted, and so, stealing softly back, we soon arrived in front of the cave, where we were at length joined by the rest of the Indians and the captured whit:s. When we had told our story, a lively discussion followed as to what we should do. Clarence James proposed that we get pistols and go and capture the plotters on the spot. Harry and I and a few others vetoed this. "They'd fight or run, and get away without being arrested," said Harry.

"Pie-face" Smithers suggested that we go and tell

"These fellows would get wind of it and wait till another time. Besides, we don't want to be 'taddle-

We're not worrying about who it is, for there's a better adventure than you'll get again for a long time." As most of the boys agreed to this, I said to Harry, "Go on, and tell your plan, now."
"Well, fellows," said he, "I'll tell you what Brig and I thought of. We thought that cight of us older boys could wait around that hedge at the side of the house until these fellows are in. Then we can gather around the porch and take them as they come out. We may have to fight, but there probably won't be more than three, and—"

"We'll do it!" cried several of the larger boys So we made our arrangements, and after pledging perfect secrecy all around we went home, the little boys to wish that they were big, and the big boys to boys to wish that they were big, and the big boys to dream of the morrow.

When I look back at that time, how I wonder that some of the boys didn't tell, either from fear of the result or inability to keep a secret. But they kept it well, and on the next evening we assembled at the cave. The next hour we spent in examining our weapons and making first place.

cave. The next hour we spent in examining our weapons and making final plans.

As to the former, they were various and mostly useless. We had one good revolver, two shotguns, one rifle that was good and one that wasn't, one ancient horse-pistol, two or three knives of as many different kinds and sizes, and several lengths of rope.

About 9 o'clock we started for "the hill." The night was dark and we reached our destination without meeting any one. A few last words from Harry and the was dark and we reached our destination without meeting any one. A few last words from Harry, and then we went shently up the slope and lay down behind the hedge. The cabin faced southeast, and directly to the east of and about thirty feet from it ran our friendly hedge. Almost as we reached it, the cabin became dark, and we guessed that old Dodge was in bed. Now came the worst time of all, just lying there and thinking. It seemed a long time, and we were just deciding that they weren't coming, when three forms seemed to grow up out of the darkness on the plot in front of the house.

We tried to hear what was said, but they talked low, and the first intimation we had of what they were talking about was when two of them started forward and left one man behind. "On guard," whispered Harry, and then, turning to Merrill, he said: "Now, 'Crawfish,' will you creep up on that fellow and tell him to keep his face shut. If he starts toward you, hit him in the legs; but if he runs, let him go."

Crawford slipped stealthily out, and, creeping up to the fellow, said in a low tone, "Hands up, pardner, and don't you yell!" Quick as a flash the man turned, and, looking into the barrel of a big revolver, cried out, "The game's up!" and fled down the hill, like the coward that he was:

"Now, boys, over with you and at the house, quick!"

'Now, boys, over with you and at the house, quick!" And we jumped and surrounded the porch before those

Meanwhile the other tramp, for they were evidently nothing more, had sprung among us, and before we could grab him, was knocking us down right and left. He was at the side of his partner in a moment, and it might have gone hard with us yet, for he was a heavy hitter, when suddenly we heard a cheer, and "strong reinforcements came up on our flank."

In a little while we eight boys, all more or less bruised and bleeding, stood around the very-much-discomfited and disgruntled "thieves" in handcuffs, while the city marshal and a deputy gazed at us with big

We soon told our story, and then they relieved our minds as to the why and wherefore of things by telling us how, a few minutes before, two very-much-worried and anxious little boys had reported the whole thing and begged them to come up before we were all murdered. They had come, and none too soon.

Old Dodge here appeared in the doorway, and he was a queer sight. He was dressed in his night robe, and wound around like a mummy with sheets and twine. His mouth was full of handkerchief, and his eyes full of wonder. He was soon untied and explained to, and—well, he didn't say much.

That is the end of my story, but I might just add

That is the end of my story, but I might just add that we had the best Fourth of July celebration that Lincoln ever saw, before or since, and the city treasurer didn't pay for it, either.

A QUEEN'S CHARITY.

[Harper's Weekly:] We hear less about Portugal than about Spain at any time, and of late have heard less than usual. The Queen of Portugal is a sovereign deserving a long mark for her interest in hospitals and hygiene, and also in the welfare of the children of noverty. At Alcantara she founded, in 1893, a dispensary peculiarly for meeting the demands of childish invalids, as pleasantly situated as possible, and spaciously planned, combining a diet kitchen, consultation rooms, surgical halls, and much of the departmental work of a hospital. Almost every day the Queen herself goes to the establishment and takes a personal share in the labors of the charity-now waiting in the kitchen distributions, and again assisting in the surgery. well-known women of her court are equally practical. The general charge of it is committed to a religious order, a favorite of the Queen's, but the eminent Pororder, a favorite of the Queen's, but the eminent Portuguese physician, Dr. Silva Carvalho, heads the staff of medical workers. In one year (1895) there were given in the building 8559 consultations, 63,704 rations from the diet kitchen, 32,521 bandagings, 76,480 prescriptions, and 470 vaccinations. The milk and vegetables are furnished gratis by the Queen, and the medical supplies are also defrayed by her. Fifteen hundred babies were treated in one twelvemonth. It is said that there is not any royal charity of the sort in Europe so efficiently managed, with the additional active cooperation of the founder.

A NOTABLE EVENT DUAL CONSECRATION TO TAKE PLACE AT NEW ORLEANS TODAY. By a Special Contributor.

ITHIN the walls of the historic St. I.ouis Cathedral, in the Quartier Francais, New Orleans, there will occur today a ceremony of great interest to the ecclesiastical world. A dual consecration, possibly the first in the history of the Catholic church in this country, will mark the first definite step taken in connection with the plan to unite the West Indian and American hierarchies. The two dignituries of the church to be honored today with the conferring of high ecclesiastical authority are Most Rev. Francis de Paula Bernada, archbishop of Santiago de Cuba, and Rt. Rev. Hubert Blenk, bishop of Porto Rico. At a public consistory held in the Valican at Rome, on June 19 of this year, the appointments of these two distinguished churchmen were announced. Archbishop Chapelle of New Orleans, special apostolic delegate to the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico, through whose influonce the appointments were secured, instructed Archbishop Bernada and Bishop Bleak to present themselves at the St. Louis Cathedral on the morning of Sunday, July 2, for consecration.

The ceremony today constitutes a strange shifting of the panorama of life. Nearly two centuries ago the bishop and bishop-elect are to be consecreated and go forth to Cuban and Porto Rican fields of labor. Two hundred years ago it was the mission of the first bishop of Louisiana to establish the Catholic church in the vast expanse west of the Mississippi River, which was then known as Louisiana, to meet the Spanish idea. Today it is the mission of the archbishop of Santiago and bishop of Porto Rico to reconstruct the Spanish Catholic church in the West Indies to accord with the American idea. The vigorous, young western child of Spain has outstripped its parent in the race, and now goes back to lend a helping hand to its mother.

The old St. Louis Cathedral, which has stood for nearly two hundred years, has been the scene of many ceremonials, ritualistic and ordinal, but the consecration today promises to exceed in grandeur and impressiveness any of its predecessors. The services will begin at 9:30 o'clock in the forenoon and last until 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The decorations are elaborate, festoons of flags and evergreens and garlands of natural flowers forming the chief accessories. The flags of Cuba and the United States and the Consular flag of Porto Rico are blended in one harmorious strand which lends color and magnificence to the ancient altars of the cathedral. Invitations to participate in the ceremonies were cent to every bishop in the diocese and to many distinguishel prelates in other sections of the country. Consequently there will be a large attendance of clergy, both native and foreign, and among the number will be some of the leading ilericals of the Union. The civic display promises to be commensurate with the importance of the occasion. It will include the Governor and staff and other officials.

The history of the unification of the Catholic church The history of the unification of the Catholic church of Cuba, Porto Rico and the United States is fraught with great interest to the Catholics of this country, shortly after the signing of the peace protocol, the Pope appointed Most Rev. Louis P. Chapelle, archbishop of the Catholic See of New Orleans, special delegate to the West Indies. Mgr. Chapelle took with him upon the occasion of his first visit to Cuba, Father James H. Blenk, then pastor of the church of the Holy Name of Mary, in Algiers, a suburban district of New Orleans. Father Blenk's duties were those of an auditor Name of Mary, in Agers, a subtribut district of New Orleans. Father Blenk's duties were those of an auditor and secretary, but Archbishop Chapelle soon saw that his eminent qualities fitted him for a much loftier station. After leaving Cuba, Archbishop Chapelle and his secretary traveled through Porto Rico, and closely studied the needs of the Catholics of that country.

Father Blenk expressed a desire to labor in that field of religious work, but his ambition did not aspire to the bishopric. Returning to Cuba, Archbishop Chapelle made a close study of religious conditions at Santiago, and weighed well the claims and qualifications of the various candidates for the archbishopric. Upon his return to this country he forwarded to the Vatican an exhaustive report of his labors, and suggested the appointments of Archbishop Bernada and Bishop Blenk, which were subsequently made.

BIBLICAL RESEARCH.

BIBLICAL RESEARCH.

[The Independent:] While the Tel-el-Amarna tablets have not proved as prolific of important results for direct Biblical research as was so confidently expected when they were first discovered, they are proving to be valuable finds for the general archeologist and historian in throwing light on the spread of the historic civilizations. A new illustration of this fact was furnished by the report made to the Berlin Society of Archeology and Ethnology in a recent convention by Dr. Ohne-falsch-Richter, on the basis of some of his recent excavations made in Tamassas in Cyprus, Here he found a bilingual inscription, dating from about 1400 B.C., the period of the 296 Amarna letters, in which inscriptions he found the evidence that the country of Alasia, the king of which is mentioned in nine of these letters, and which is there described as famous for its rich coper mines, and which name had hitherto not been identified, is none other than Cyprus. This identification was suspected before, but inscription testimony to this effect has only now been furnished. Dr. Ohnefalsch-Richter found in the bilingual and biographical contents of this Graeco-Cypriote text the name Apollo with the title "Alasiotas." This inscription was discovered in the sacred grove of Apollo at Frangissa. The speaker declares that the word Alasia, which in the Phoenician text of the Cypriote bilingual inscriptions reads "Alas. the sacred grove of Apollo at Frangissa. The speaker declares that the word Alasia, which in the Phoenician text of the Cypriote bilingual inscriptions reads "Alahijotas," is a Greek word, and that the King of Alasia mentioned in the Tel-el-Amarna correspondence was a Greek. This gives new significance to the finds of a large number of Mycenae clay utensils found by Flinders Petrie in Tel-el-Amarna, especially as these utensils are covered with Cypriote characters. These, together with the hand-made Cypriote bronze utensils are found here, were evidently tribute sent by the King asso found here, were evidently tribute sent by the King of Alasia-Cyprus to the King of Egypt, the fact of which tribute-sending and paying is repeatedly mentioned in the Amarna tablets.

William Dean Howells is at work with Frank Drake on a dramatization of his "A Hazard of Fortunes." Mr. Howells has long been anxious to win laurels as a playwright. BOHEMIAN DAYS.

THE DELIGHTS TO BE FOUND IN AND AROUND LOS ANGELES.

By a Special Contributor.

KNOW of nothing more delightful than Bohemian days in California, wandering at one's own sweet will, hither and thither, without let or hindrance, in the glory of the year's long, golden days. Nature here is always companionable, always suggestive of great, unfathomed mines of thought, which stretch on and on, while all of her moods appeal to the best that is in one, whatever the season of the year may be. Her broad, sunny plains show her great, open, smiling face, and there is a look of calm content about them that appeals to one's spirit of cheerfulness. How full and warm they are, breathing beauty and sunlight and drinking in the soft air like the wine of summer! How glorious with bird-song and how fragrant with flowers! The landscape everywhere is one great alembic of color and light. The butterflies, like air blossoms, dot the pleasant sunshine; there is a shimmer and tremble of miner are supplied to the color and the ship of the color and the ble of wings everywhere among the trees, the ripple of song in all the meadows, and sometimes just a sparkle of water from low-lying marsh lands to fill up the pic-

I sometimes wonder how many of our Lo3 Angeles dwellers have any conception of the beauty that may be found just outside the city, which Nature has folded in her soft lap, and which she is waiting to reveal to us when we come with open eyes to look into her face. Sho is a dreamer like ourselves, and she is a poet with the most marvelous epics written in her alphabet of light and shade, of valley and hillside, of tree and flower, and she is generous with all that she has and loves to have us share her riches and read her full-flowing rhymes.

A few days since, as I looked out from my window, it seemed as if I saw a special beckoning movement of her hand which proved irresistible, and I at once sallied forth to answer her call.

"Let us go out to Cahuenga and Hollywood," I said to my nature-loving companion, as we took our seat in the trap that stood at the door. Old little jerk of the reins and we were on our way, the fairest of bright skies overhead, and against the melting background of the heavens the great blue wall of everlasting mounthe reins and we were on our way, the fairest of bright skies overhead, and against the melting background of the heavens the great blue wall of everlasting mountains. Driving down the broad Wilshire boulevard for a short distance to the westward, with a wide and beautiful perspective of rolling hills, m niature valleys and broad plains forever unfolding on every hand, with a beautiful breastwork of trees in the distance, and far off to the left the extended streets of the city, which thread their way over the beautiful Pico Heights, where we could see rising like some Old World castle the red and towering walls of the Catholic convent, we reached at length Western avenue, that loveliest of highways about Los Angeles, stretching from Pico Heights clear to the very foot of the mountains.

It is useless to attempt to put into words the beautiful panorama that gradually opened before us of hills and vales; of green orchards and pleasant vineyards; of great, yellow harvest fields; of tree-dotted plains; lovely country homes and tiny hamlets; of roads overarched by great, branching trees, fit home for forest dryads; of high, huge-shouldered Cahuenga, his bald, bare face looking down upon the valleys reposing at his feet. There nestles beautiful Hollywood, in her forest of orchards, her lap filled with fast-ripening fruits, and there lovely Prospect Park, smiling forever linto Nature's face, and from which one obtains a series of wide, enchanting views, with wonderfully-varied touches of color.

We passed here a groupe of wagons, which had stopped in the midst of the highway, and the occupants, young and old, were engaged in an earnest consultation which we did not quite comprehend as we drove past them, but the mystery of which was solved on our return. They were campers, and they had driven into a wide field, which had been shorn of its golden harvest of wheat, and whose floor was now covered with yellow stubble. But to one side was a great breastwork of forest trees, and upon the other some low, rounded hills, which looked down upon them with a fraternal, sheltering air, and close at hand some pretty country cottages, near which a sleek cow fed and one or two dogs lay in ing air, and c'o's at hand some pretty country cottages, near which a sleek cow fed and one or two dogs lay in its shadow. What a happy look of content was in the faces of the young girls of the party as they sat watching the white tents lifted under the shadow of the trees. The starry stillness of the night, with the young moon in the sky watching them, with the great mountains so near, how beautiful it would all be!

"I am delighted that we were so fortunate as to find this lovely avenue," said I. "How beautiful it all is, and only a stone's throw, as it were, from the city's streets."

"Yes," said my companion, "and yet these people who live with Nature every day do not seem to love her as city people do. They appear to look with unseeing eyes at her manifold charms."

But this was not true of them all, for no one could have built such lovely homes or cultivated such beautiful grounds as we frequently passed if their hearts had not been in sympathy with the charm and grandeur about them there.

"I am more than glad to have discovered this beautiful disay." I said to have discovered this beautiful disay." I said to have descovered this beautiful disays.

"I am more than glad to have discovered this beautiful drive," I said, as we drove homeward in the golden ful drive," I said, as we drove homeward in the golden glow of the late afternoon, when the landscape reposed in the warm rosy lights, and with the distant heights suffused with a faint, intangible veil of mist, which glorified the distant towers and roofs, and made them look to us like an ethereal city. How delightful the calm and repose of the great valley as we looked away toward the sea! How beautiful the whole, wide perspective as its boundaries seemed to melt into the refulgent ether, and as we threaded the boulevard and came into full view of the park, how beautiful the lake, girdled with trees, its waters shining like purest crystal, and surrounded by its grand amphitheater of hills, covered with beautiful homes, all glowing in the rosy light of sunset! Where, I would like to know, will you find a lovelier picture? ELIZA A. OTIS.

VERY BUSY MEN.

HOW SOME OF AMERICA'S GREAT MEN LIVE AND WORK.

esident McKinley at Work.

OW does the ruler of the greatest nation of earth manage to get through the enormous' amount of work which falls upon his shoulders as he takes the oath of office? How is President McKinley able to receive the scores of daily callers at the White House, talk over the affairs of government with members of the Cabinet and Congress, answer the mass of important letters daily addressed to him, look over and sign documents of state, prepare his messages and proclamations and keep clearly in mind and give just decisions on questions ranging from a country postoffice to a war with Spain? In other words, what are the President's methods of doing the work of ten men? What are his working habits?

To obtain answers to these interesting questions, I called upon the Secretary-to-the-President Porter, at the White House. In answer to the question:

What is the programme of a typical working day of the President?" he said:

"He breakfasts at 9. After breakfast he reads the papers. Reaches his desk by 9:45 or 10 o'clock, and does not leave it until luncheon at 1:30. The first two or three hours of the morning are devoted to receiving Senators, Cabinet officers, Ambassadors of foreign nations, Con-gressmen and all persons entitled to his presence gressmen and all persons entitled to his presence through official position.

"An hour is then given to the reception of the general public. Sometimes, however, the stress of public duties is so great that this hour is omitted.

"After luncheon the President enjoys a chat with Mrs. McKinley. Between 2:15 and 2:30 o'clock p.m., he is again in his office, and until 4:30 goes through substantially the same process as in the morning. Then, if the weather be pleasant, he takes a carriage drive of an hour through the streets of the city, accompanied by Mrs. McKinley. Sometimes he rides several miles on horseback; frequently he walks. His favorite pedestrian resorts are Pennsylvania avenue, Massachusetts avenue, or a circuit of the White House lot. In his journeys afoot he usually has a companion, a Cabinet official, or some intimate friend. intimate friend.

"On his return he opens the telegrams that have arrived during his absence, and glances over the evening papers. Dinner is at 7 o'clock. The President follows his old-established custom of never appearing at a dinner table without being attired in a dress suit. Dinner lasts about an hour. The President then engages in social intercourse with intimate friends, members of the Cabinet and their wives and daughters, and old Ohio acquaintances, who may call. At 9 or 9:30 he leaves the party, comes to the office and engages for two or three hours in the hardest work of the day. It is at this time that he writes his messages, examines important bills of Congress, passes upon questions submitted to him for decision, etc. It is often after midnight before he retires. "On his return he opens the telegrams that have ar-

In the afternoon he frequently takes Mrs. Mc-Kinley out for a drive, and the evening is spent in lis-tening to sacred music in the parlors of the White House. How Edison Works.

I paid a visit to Edison's home in Llewellyn Park, N. J., to discover the working ways of the greatest inventor of this generation. After considerable ringing of an electrical bell on the gate of the high fence surrounding his laboratory, I was finally admitted. A boy took my card and went in search of the wizard. He said there was no telling in what part of the big building the inventor might be at that moment. I sat down and waited. At the end of thirty minutes a man appeared and told me to follow. After zig-zagging here and there waited. At the end of thirty minutes a man appeared and told me to follow. After zig-zagging here and there and up three flights of stairs I was given a seat in a large room where half a dozen men were working on sections of future inventions. In a few minutes a figure appeared in the doorway that was instantly recognized from his picture in the newspapers—it was Edison, the prince of inventors. He was clad in a gray suit, which was literally plastered with dirt and dust. His face was full, smooth-shaven, ruddy—without the trace of a wrinkle. His hair, however, is turning gray in places. Mr. Edison greeted me cordially and chatted entertainingly, but would not consent to talk about his methods of work. He referred me finally to Mr. Mallory, who gave me the following interesting outline of how the inventor does the work of a dozen men:

"Mr. Edison reaches the laboratory where his different experiments are conducted, between 7 and 8 a.m. He immediately dons his working garb and begins work, which is kept up with scarcely a moment's interruption until 7 p.m. At the present time he is superintending the construction of twelve different inventions. All day long he walks from one department to another where the various machines are building, showing his workmen just what to do on each instrument. He seems to men just what to do on each instrument. men just what to do on each instrument. He seems to have no difficulty in carrying the twelve inventions in his head at once and developing each simultaneously. He never gets one confused with another.

never gets one confused with another. Each screw or bolt or wire of each machine he sees in his mind as distinctly as though he were looking at the visible object. "Lunch is brought from his home to the laboratory, but he frequently forgets all about it. Generally, however, after half a dozen of us have called his attention to the fact that he has eaten nothing, he will sit down and munch a few minutes between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Edison is a very light eater. He has been so from boyhood. What are his favorite dishes? It's hard to tell—he cares so little about his food. I think, however, that he likes a good steak as well as anything."

"Is it true that Mr. Edison was once a great lover of pie?" was asked.

"Yes," said Mr. Mallory, "but of recent years, on account of somewhat impaired digestion, he eats less of it than formerly. Years ago it was his delight. He tells the story of how he once went to London on an important mission. The chief thing they gave him to eat was roast beef. Mr. Edison finally rebelled. He declared his brain was becoming roast-beefy, and his thoughts were as clear as an ocean fog. In sheer despair he ran out of the restaurant one evening and sought far and near for a piece of good Yankee pie. He found it shortly and ate several pieces. His brain cleared as if by magic. He quickly and successfully finished his business and returned home a happy and pie-loving man."
"What is Mr. Edison's favorite recreation in the evening?" I asked.

"What is Mr. Eulson's Andrews and ing?" I asked.
"Recreation!" exclaimed Mr. Mallory. "He has no recreation except work. He gets his recreation in a change of work. In the evening after dinner he goes into his den and reads up on the various inventions on which he is engaged. Next morning when he reaches the laboratory he has a number of new ideas which he incorporates into the machines."
"Doesn't he take any outdoor exercise?"

"Doesn't he take any outdoor exercise?"
"Hardly any, save walking to and from the laboratory.
The doesn't ride a wheel and don't like to drive because he has been thrown from a carriage several times. Of course he gets considerable exercise all day long in walk-ing from one department of the big laboratory to another."

"How many hours does Mr. Edison sleep?"
"Four hours as a rule. Sometimes, however, he takes far less than that. You have doubtless heard how he once worked sixty hours without a wink of sleep. It is a fact. I remember another time Mr. Edison, myself and several others worked for six weeks with only two hours of sleep a night outside of Sundays."
"It seems as if it would have been impossible to stand it," I said.
"No." said Mr. Mallory. "we soon became used to it.

stand it," I said.

"No," said Mr. Mallory, "we soon became used to it. The first three nights between midnight and 3 in the morning, it seemed as though we must fall asleep. Afterwards we got along very comfortably. Feel dull and as if in a dream during the day? Not at all. We felt very much as usual. Still, such a strain does not pay in the long run. It uses up too much vital energy.
"To me it is a curious fact that Mr. Edison seems, when hard at work, to lose all perception of time. He will frequently say to me: 'Mal'ory, what day is this?' Thursday,' I will reply. 'What!' he exclaims, with a startled look. 'I thought it was Tuesday.'"

Possibly one thing that has enabled Mr. Edison to attain his wonderful concentration of mind is his slight tain his wonderful concentration of mind is his slight tain his wonderful concentration of mind is his slight deafness. He can sit in a room where his assistants are working and pursue his investigations in quiet, uninterrupted by the conversation they carry on. When anyone wishes to speak to the inventor he raises his voice slightly above the ordinary conversational tone. As it thus aids him in his work, Mr. Edison considers his defect of hearing a blessing in disguise.

Wanamaker's Working Day.

John Wanamaker, the merchant prince of Philadelphia and New York, is a man whose working capacity seems unlimited. He has built up his immense business by sheer pluck and keeping everlastingly at work. He began as a penniless boy, and is now the greatest merchant in America. Though 61 years of age, Mr. Wanamaker locks hardly 50. His figure is full, stalwart, straight as an arrow. His hair is brown close cronned and tinged His hair is brown, close cropped and tinged an arrow.

with gray just above the ear tips.

Here is the story of Mr. Wanamaker's working day.

Rises before 6 a.m.; takes a short walk or ride on horseback before breakfast at 6:30; eats little at all times; arrives at the office on the Juniper-street side of his Philadelphia store at 8:15. Spends an hour in look-ing over and answering letters. His rule is to answer each letter received as quickly as possible. Receives callers and confers with the chief managers until noon. He is famous for his courteousness to callers, and also for his quick yet pleasant method of dismissing them to for his quick yet pleasant method of dismissing them to make room for others. During the noon hour he often attends business, political or religious meetings of one kind or another. Takes a light lunch in a private room in a corner of the store with his son and some distinguished guest. Vegetables and fruit constitute his principal articles of diet. He rarely drinks tea or coffee.

The afternoon is usually spent in his son's office, seeing only the most urgent callers, and actively supervising the work of the fifty-four different departments of the great enterprise. He walks much about the store, speaking a kind word here, overseeing that alteration there, always watchful, alert, planning, organizing, scheming. Leaves the store about 6:30. Has dinner at 7. Spends the evening in conversation with family or friends, in reading or quiet recreation, or possibly re-

During the summer and fall Mr. Wanamaker lives at "Lindenhurst," his beautiful country home, situated in the midst of the historic Chelton Hills. A ride of half an hour on the Reading Railway takes you to Jenkintown, Pa, and a mile southward appears the red tiling on the cupola of the mansion.

An intimate friend gives this account of the merchant's home life:

home life:

"This country home, you know, is particularly dear to both Mr, and Mrs. Wanamaker, and there the happiest hours in his busy life are spent among the flowers and trees and birds. It is his custom when at home, to rise early each morning and spend a few minutes at least walking about the grounds. He says it makes the day easier when he carries some of the morning freshness into his office with him. For everyone, from the old flagman at the station to the dogs about the place, he has a kindly greeting when he meets them, and they all feel a kindly greeting when he meets them, and they all feel better for having seen and spoken to him."

Mr. Wahamaker knows ho day of rest. On sinday he attends church in the morning and in the afternoon teaches a Bible class numbering 2000 in "Wanamaker's Sunday-School," which has the reputation of being the largest Sunday-school in the world. When asked whether he had seen God's hand guiding him in his career, Mr. Wanamaker said to me:

His life motto is a verse from the Bible: "He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."

Preacher's Day. Probably the busiest preacher in America is Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus, pastor of Central Church, Chicago. In addition to his ministerial duties, Dr. Gunsaulus finds time to act as president of Armour Institute of Technology, lecture, write novels, biographies and poems. In the course of a single day he will prepare a sermon, oversee the institute work, write a chapter in a new book, and in the evening deliver a lecture. He works with refreshing ease, and is always ready for a joke or story in a spare moment.

Here is the outline of his method as he gave it to me one morning in the president's office at Armour Insti-

"I am at work at my desk in this office at 7:30 a.m. For two hours I am occupied with my correspondence, and in getting a general survey of the work in the various departments. Nine-thirty to 12 o'clock are my office and reception hours, when I have appointments with all sorts of people concerning the affairs of the institute. At noon my secretary and I go over to my stitute. At noon my secretary and I go over to my mother's house, which is near by, and get some pancakes, such as mother used to make, pumpkin pies and other good things in the form of luncheon, to bridge over the chasm of our hunger.

"In the afternoon I have a long talk with my secretary, Mrs. Bell, who has been with me nine years, and knows all my lecture appointments, and engagements to speak, and keeps track of all the business phases of whatever I and keeps track of all the business phases of whatever I may write or whatever I may have to do in other lines of work. She keeps account of all the vouchers I sign; of all the institute money which comes over the desk, which amounts to $125,000 yearly, etc.

"After this I take my assistants and go into the library to read and study. These assistants work near me, taking dictation and making notes from their own reading of things in which I am interested, and I look over them at other times. They know all my peculiarities of phraseology, know what I have preached about and where I have preached it, and whether I have used certain material in this place or that.

"During the entire afternoon I have a horse and buggy out in front into which I jump at every available opportunity and get a breath of fresh air by making a call or After dinner, at home, I have two hours on the average. I use them for general reading, or to regale ourselves with song.

"How do you manage to do so much and varied work, including preaching twice on Sunday, governing a great educational institution and writing numerous books?"

"Well," he replied, "I don't fuss any, I don't allow any friction in my life, except what I can't avoid, and I take these as means of grace and am happy about it. I think my friends are the best things that come to me that help me to work. I am most fortunate in having a host of friends of rich, affectionate natures."

It is not generally known that Dr. Gunsaulus has devoted all his spare time during the last two years to the preparation of a life of Christ, which will be published in the fall, and promises to be the most popular biography of the founder of Christianity since Farrar's notable book a quarter century ago. It is written from a new standpoint, is distinctly a human sketch, is entirely free from scholasticism and theological controversy. Indeed it is what no one save Renan has dared to do heretofore—paint a human realistic portrait of the Man Wonderful. With rare dramatic and literary skill. Dr. Gun--paint a human realistic portrait of the Man Wonderful. With rare dramatic and literary skill Dr. Gunsaulus has traced the evolution of Christ's character from Nazareth to Calvary. It is stated that the publishers have spent thousands of dollars, in illustrating the volume with modern realistic drawings on the order of the Tissot pictures, and with reproductions of the best maintings paintings.

How a Famous Doctor Works.

One of the hardest working physicians in America is Dr. Cyrus Edson. He has a large general practice in New York City, and in addition probably does more popular literary work than any of his contemporaries. For several years he was president of the New York Board of Health. He is intensely interested in every phase of life and can say something worth listening to on any life and can say something worth listening to on any topic that comes up in conversation. Few men have more thoroughly mastered the art of living. Ite is an athlete, both in appearance and in reality. He is an omnivorous reader, never being, when not at work, without a book or magazine in his hand, whether riding in a carriage, street car or railway train.

When I called at Dr. Edson's office recently he gave when I called at Dr. Edson's omce recently he gave me the following outline of his working day, in answer to numerous questions:

"I rise at 7 a.m., dress rapidly and eat a light breakfast. Ten minutes is usually all the time given to this meal. I care very little what I eat—indeed, when any important matter is on my mind, I will sometimes sit down at the table and forget entirely about my oatmeal important matter is on my mind, I will sometimes sit down at the table and forget entirely about my oatmeal and coffee.

"After breakfast I invariably spend two hours in !!terary work, and I may frankly confess that there is nothing that gives me greater pleasure than writing.

"From 9:30 to 12:30 I receive patients. My practice is a general one, with special attention given to electrical treatment of diseases. To many of the persons that come to consult me I give no medicine or treatment whatever. I merely correct the wrong habits of living into which they have fallen 'through carelessness or ignorance. It is surprising," said Dr. Edson, sympathetically, "how few people understand how to make the most of life. Everybody is in search of happiness yet the blunders they make in reaching after it are simply appalling. I stand in a position to know the facts about people's lives, and it often makes me sick at neart to see what fools they are in the simplest matters of right living. Why take it in the question of marrying!" he exclaimed. "Few know the first principles of the physiology and psychology and ethics of love. The result is often a blunder, the evil effects of which last through life."

It may be of interest to know that Dr. Edson is at

It may be of interest to know that Dr. Edson is at present engaged in writing a popular treatise on the relations of the sexes. It will be entitled "Love: the Most Beautiful Thing in the World."

"After luncheon I make whatever calls are necessary.

Late in the afternoon three times a week I go to the gymnasium for an hour. For half or three-quarters of an hour I engage in some vigorous exercise, such as boxing, then hurry to the baths and take a shower, which is to me the very elixir of life. I believe it doubles my daily working capacity. I first take a hot shower of from three to five minwes, and then a cold shower of from five daily working capacity. I hist take a not shower of from five to ten seconds. The hot spray cleanses the skin thoroughly; it opens the pores and lets out any impurities that have gathered. The cold spray closes the pores and invigorates the entire system. It acts like a stimulating tonic and is entirely harmless for anyone who is not troubled with heart disease.

VIEWS OF MILLIONAIRES ON THE DUTY WEALTH IMPOSES.

By a Special Contributor.

HERE are indications that a new interest has been awakened among the very wealthy men of the country in the subject of great philanthropies, Men and women are giving or preparing to give away millions to one great charity or another. It looks as though Andrew Carnegie's dictum that to die rich is to die disgraced, was making a good many converts among

If it is a disgrace to die rich, what are our wealthy men to do with their millions? What are the objects, and who are the subjects likely to profit by well-directed charity? Are our millionaires ready to give away their wealth, or a part of it? These and other questions connected with this new movement now on foot among the wealthy are answered in this article by some of the most prominent millionaires and philanthropists in the country.

John D. Rockefeller is reported to be worth $300,θ00,-600 or more. He has given away at least $20,000,000. He holds decided views on the subject of charitably giving and employs almoners to see that his own benef-icences bring good results. Mr. Rockefeller says:

"I hold that it is every man's duty to make as much as he can, and to give away as much as he can to good purpose. True philanthropy, like charity, begins at home. If the millionaire invests his money in business that provides employment for large numbers of men, if he pays his employés well, so that they can work out their own advancement, he is fulfiling his duty. to the community and doing the greatest amount of good to the workingmen.

"As for the surplus wealth which a man may accumulate beyond his own needs and those of his family, there are a variety of useful ways in which it may be employed. I have always been interested in church work, and conceive it to be my first duty to give to religious enterprises. Next to that the cause of education ap-peals to me. If a rich man has any duties beyond those of his fellows, in a country ike this, whose stability depends upon the intelligence and moral character of its citizens, it is to help toward the moral and intellectual betterment of those who lack advantages or opportunities. I do not believe there is any man in opportunities. I do not believe there is any man in the country today with a million dollars beyond his own personal and business needs who would not give it to any object which he felt perfectly sure would help the citizenship of the country in these two respects."

Mr. Armour's Views.

Philip D. Armour, who has given away $10,000,900,

Philip D. Armour, who has given away $10,000,000, and has not yet stopped, says:

"While I do not pretend to be an authority on scientific charity, I have tried to embody my own ideas on the subject in the Armour Institute."

As the Armour Institute is conducted for the purpose of giving the poor boys of Chicago technical and trade education, Mr. Armour evidently agrees with Mr. Rockefeller in holding to the educational idea.

C. P. Huntington.

There are others who believe that there are better ways of employing wealth than by giving it away. C. P. Huntington is one of these. He says:

P. Huntington is one of these. He says:

"Suppose a man who has made fifty or one hundred millions in business, withdraws that sum and gives it away in any form he may select. The chances are nine out of ten that his money will do less real good than it would if he had left it where it was. Great wealth is desirable only for what it can accomplish. I think we are coming more and more to appreciate that. But it can accomplish more by sticking to its legitimate field than it can by going out of its way to promote Utopian schemes or by spoiling young men by overeducating them.

"It is the duty of great wealth to carry out great in-dustrial and commercial enterprises, which result in cheapened production or more opportunities for labor. If $75,000,000 can so develop our trade with the East that we get one of our necessary commodities a cent a pound cheaper, it will do more good in the end than if it is distributed among the people of the comptant a point cheaper, it will do more good in the end than if it is distributed among the people of the country, giving them a dollar apiece in direct charity. If a man sets a great industrial enterprise in motion he cannot help doing good, and the question of what to do with his money does not bother him, because it is fully occu-

A Great Banker's Opinion.

A Great Banker's Opinion.

J. Pierpont Morgan has given money to build hospitals, to buy works of art for public museums, and to help build a great cathedral. Apparently he thinks the millions given to the first of these objects the best employed, for he says:

"When one looks about and sees the misery and suffering caused by sickness among those who have not themselves the means to relieve it, he cannot help feeling that to alleviate a little of it is the duty of those who have been fortunate or successful. The care of the

who have been fortunate or successful. The care of the sick poor is, in my opinion, our most practical charity.

No Disgrace to Die Rich. Russell Sage agrees with Mr. Morgan that to relieve the sick is a charity that should appeal to wealthy men. Mr. Sage recently gave several thousands toward woman's hospital. However, he does not agree with a woman's hospital. However, he does not agree with Mr. Carnegie's dictum. He says:

"I do not see how it is a disgrace for a man to die rich. If it is, I am afraid that Mr. Carnegie will die disgraced. My own opinion is that a man may better employ his money in productive enterprises that give employment and benefit the community, than to give it away. Suppose I gave away all that I own to thousands of poor people in this city today. Next week it would all be gone, and they would be back here for more. But by using it in the business enterprises which I represent, it gives steady work to hundreds of honest workingmen, who don't want any charity beyond what workingmen, who don't want any charity beyond what Says Wealth is a Trust.

Nathan Strauss, the wealthy merchant, who has given away large sums to various practical charities, such as providing pure milk at a nominal price in the tenement districts of New York, believes that the question of the unemployed is the greatest problem that philanthropists have to face. He says:

"Undoubtedly our wealthy men are coming more and more to regard their possessions as a trust held in keeping by them, and to be devoted in part at least to the betterment of their less fortunate fellows.
"I believe that if any map has a million or several."

"I believe that if any man has a million or several millions to give away, the best use he can put it to is to furnish work to the unemployed. It cannot be denied that there are thousands of men in the country all the time who are willing and anxious to work, but who, for one reason or another, cannot find work to do. Your man of millions can accomplish a world of cood if he will provide employment for these men and good if he will provide employment for these men and women, giving each the work that he or she can do, and helping them to permanent positions. It would require a good deal of money to set such an enterprise going on any extensive scale, but once under way it would be largely self-supporting.'

Dr. Rainsford on the Question.

Dr. Rainsford on the Question.

Dr. William E. Rainsford, pastor of St. George's Episcopal Church in New York, which gives a great deal of money every year for charitable work, holds very different opinions. Dr. Rainsford said:

"If a man came to me today and asked: "How can I best employ a million dollars in charitable work in New York City?" I should reply: "Go buy some blocks of tenements; tear them down and turn the space into a playground for poor children." Anything that adds to the enjoyment, healthfulness and right training of children, improves the moral and physical tone of the community, and gives assurance that the coming men and women shall be decent and worthy citizens.

"Another broad line of work which I think deserving of greater attention from those who want to do good and women shall be decent and worthy citizens.

"Another broad line of work which I think deserving of greater attention from those who want to do good with their money is the relief of the poverty-stricken over 60, who have failed in the battle of life.

"Do you know that 30 per cent. of those who die in this city are buried in quick lime in the potter's field? That is a terrible indictment against our social system, a terrible testimonial to the neglect of the deserving poor of advanced age. I do not believe that there is any pauperizing tendency in helping the deserving poor of advanced age. For myself, I believe in old age pensions. I believe that the time will come when we shall have them. Meanwhile, here is a large and profitable field for the employment of private charity.

"The trouble with our millionaires and great givers is that they are so accustomed to authority, so masterful, that they want to dictate exactly how their gifts shall be applied and used.

"That is a great trouble with us today. We have men on our art commissions, not because they know anything about art, but because they will give money. We have trustees on our educational boards who know nothing of scientific education, but who are able to force their hobbies upon practical educators because of the money they give. Similarly our charities are largely in the hands of men who never gave the subject any particular thought, but who dictate because they give. "I do not believe that charity can be employed advantageously at the present time in providing employment. As soon as one attempts that he runs up against vested interests and encounters a variety of difficulties which will embarrass and to a great extent nullify his work."

D. O. Mills Discusses Wealth as a Trust.

Darius O. Mills, the San Francisco and New York multi-millionaire, has given hundreds of thousands to charity, and has unique and practical views on the sub-ject. He says:

"Probably there never has been a time when so many men were ready to give largely to worthy objects. It is a good sign, in an age that is often denounced as grossly material, that so many men are ready to devote at least a considerable portion of their wealth to altruistic pur-

"I do not believe that one can say off-hand that any particular charity is the most useful or the most prac-tical. Any man who is deeply interested in such matters is more familiar with certain lines of charitable endeavor than he is with others. He is apt to exag-gerate the importance that he knows most about.

"For myself, I do not know of any form of charity that I would condemn. Neither do I know of any that is doing more practical good than the Mills Hotels. When the p'an of providing cheap, clean and comfort-table ledgings for noor workingmen was discussed. when the part of poor workingmen was discussed, it was freely predicted that it would result in failure. It was said that a scheme which was part business and part philanthropy would never work. But the test of actual operation has proved that the Mills Hotels are all business as well as some philanthropy. They are proving successful far beyond my expectations.

actual operation has proved that the Mills Hotels are all business as well as some philanthropy. They are proving successful far beyond my expectations.

"In my opinion, the success of the Mills Hotels, as of any philanthropic undertaking that is to be really beneficial, lies in helping menu to help themselves. My idea of charitable work is not the reformatory idea, but the building-up idea. If a man is determined to go down hill, you can't hold him back. But it is the man who is unfortunate; the honest man who has had ill-luck, the hard-working man out of a job, who deserves help, and who will profit by it.

who will profit by it. "If you give such a man a chance to put food in his stomach and a roof over his head, you give him a new outlook, fresh encouragement. He will feel that he outlook, fresh encouragement. He will feel that he has a chance, and will set to work to make the most of it. By making him pay for what he receives, you keep him from becoming a pauper. By making him pay as little as possible you do not make his attempt to rise to a better condition a hopeless one.

"This is my idea of the most useful charity today—to help the honest, the unfortunate, the deserving poor man to help himself. And there are enough such men and such ways of employing money to use all the spare millions in the country today."

James J. Hill, the railroad king of the Northwest, who has developed a vast section of this country's territory within the last twoscore years, at the same time creatwithin the last twoscore years, at the same time creating one of the more noteworthy private fotunes of the age, believes that men who have large sums of money at their command should devote it to the great work of bringing the country and its people to the highest possible state of development as speedily as may be. For those men of wealth who devote their time and their means mainly to the promotion of their personal comfort, who live chiefly for the purpose of going through certain social programmes from year's end to year's end, he has not the slightest sympathy, nor does he consider them of sufficient importance to warrant discussion. He looks upon the world, especially this part of it, as a vast and splendid field of labor, and has little regard for all those, whether rich or poor, who refuse to obey the call to work therein. His views upon the correct use of money were indicated in outline in a recent private conversation, the parties to which were discussing the education of rich young men.

"In these days the greatest dangers to the sons of rich men," said Mr. Hill, substantially, "are indo!ence and the traderum to discrete the billentiac experience."

rich men," said Mr. Hill, substantially, "are indo!ence and the tendency to disregard the obligations every human being owes to his fellows. It seems necessary to send such young men to the great universities, that they may be fitted properly to play their parts in modern life, which is far broader than any which has gone before. There are many influences at these universities which are not good for young men, but which must be met fairly and not in any sense avoided. If not com-which are not good for young men, but which must be met fairly and not in any sense avoided. If not combated, these influences would tend to foster selfishness, triviality, love of ease and disinclination to meet the real problems of life. Every rich young man who manfully evercomes these influences is a distinct addition to the valuable forces of the entire nation, besides being far better fitted than he who weakly yields, to live a life in which he may take proper personal pride. Young men who pass through the period of education without loss of moral fiber, will use the money they inherit to their own credit and the moral, material and intellectual uplifting of the race. The others will come to to their own credit and the moral, material and intellectual uplifting of the race. The others will come to naught; they will be the victims of Nature's inexorable law as to the survival of the fit, and in this country, which has no law of entail, they will be speedy victims, too. It is well for the republic that there is no law of entail here; it is a safeguard to the institutions of the country that those who, through incompetence or disinclination rightly to employ their wealth, misspend it, are certain, soon or late, to find that it has flown."

A PROFESSIONAL ANXIETY BEARER,

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

How to be happy, though the hostess of a large dinner party with a long menu, is what an exceedingly thoughtful young lady, at the rate of from $3 to $5 an evening, is showing a number of wealthy women. This young lady, who enjoys a great gift for all artistic devices and practical measures in connection with entertaining, lost her own fortune not long ago, and in looking round for a means of bread-winning decided to become a professional bearer of dinner-party anxieties.

Her idea was too good not to fall into prompt and profitable working order, and last winter she had rather more engagements at $5 an evening than she could fill. What she does, literally, is to manage dinners, or wedding breakfasts, or large luncheons, and though she neither cooks nor waits on table, she fulfills a most important mission.

She stands before the hostess in all worry. hour before the meal is served, she appears in the dining-room and sees to it that the butler has got the table set and his own toilet arranged and the pink of perfection, that the wines are rising or falling to precisely the right temperature, then she dons her big apron, and as guests file into the dining-room takes her stand by the pantry's dumb-waiter, to not takes her stand by the pantry's dumb-watter, to not only observe that every dish comes up exactly on time, but piping hot when it ought to be hot, chilled to the marrow when the chill is necessary, but, furthermore, she tastes it to see that its flavor is exactly what it ought to be.

Having a quick wit, resourceful mind, and a profound knowledge of French cookery, she takes care that no dish passes onto the table that is not above reproach. Where she stands in the pantry there is heard none of the crash and grind of dinner-party machinery; no long waits between courses elapse, and the first drop of every wine poured must first be tested on her sensitive pink tongue.

Now this may seem a sinecure, but grateful hostesses look upon her work as an exalted modern philanthropy, for even if the butler is a perfectly new man, the cook a possible traitor to her trust, and the caterer apt to play tricks with his ices and sorbets, so long as the dinner manageress is at the pantry helm nothing can go wrong, no cold soups, hot champagne, dried-up birds or scorched vegetables will ever make their appearance at the table. With all the ease of an unfettered soul the hostess can give her whole mind to her guests. If the basics can give her whole mind to her guests. If she is a hostess new at the business, she can send for the manageress beforehand and have her dinner all planned for her, every detail considered, even to the color of the flowers and the pattern on the table cloth, and the very latest surprise in an envious delectation of her guests. But this is an extra.

SOME REAL KITCHEN WISDOM,

HOW TO FRESHEN WITHERED VEGETABLES, DO CRISP FRYING AND MAKE MINT SAUCE.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

Always heat a frying pan before putting anything in it, not scorching, but hissing hot. Test it with a drop of water—if it dances about a little hissing globule the pan is just right. Things laid in a cold pan and then set over the fire are certain to stick, besides they lack the appetizing crispness, which is the main reason for frying. In breakfast bacon, particularly, it makes all the difference in the world in flavor.

Unless vegetables are taken direct from the garden they are improved by freshening in clean cold water. let them stand two or three hours. They will cook tender and full flavored, whereas if put on to boil half wilted, they are apt to be insipld and stringy. This is especially true of such things as cauliflower, asparagus and Brussels sprouts, also of .e plant. If new potatoes are soaked thus, the work of scraping them is made very much easier and the potatoes themselves turn out meetier.

Mint for sauce is best cut with a pair of clean, gry sharp scissors. Hold a dozen stalks of even length in the hand, and clip them all through at one stroke, of course cutting the bits very short. Thus you avoid the bitter, bruised taste so often made in chopping. Keep the mint in water until wanted, and do not make the sauce until the meat it is to accompany is on the platter ready to serve. By using fresh lime juice instead of vinegar, with a dash of good brandy and a little cayenne your mint sauce may be quite transfigured.

HEART DISEASE.

WONDERFUL CURES BY MEANS OF BATHS AND VIOLENT EXERCISE.

By a Special Contributor.

CURE has been found for heart disease. No drugs are used in this treatment. All that is required of the patient is that he shall take frequent baths, followed by certain exercises, as in a gymnasium. Persons who were unable to walk have been cured by this simple treatment. It is known as the "resisted movement" cure, and it has made a town famous. Nauheim, which is situated about twenty miles from Frankfort in Germany, is full of heart-disease patients, and it is the Mecca toward which thousands of sufferers are getting ready to travel. This, however, is merely because these people can afford to go to headquarters, but it is a fact that anyone can learn the treatment and have it administered at home.

These facts are reasonably important, for it is calcu-These facts are reasonably important, for it is calculated that the majority of persons, in the United States at least, have some form of heart disease. This is due to the high pressure under which we live. The result is because the condition has been suddenly thrust upon us, rather than because of the condition itself. For centuries our ancestors jogged along through life with what might be called a measured, dignified tread, each nation within itself. Then came the great commingling which was brought about by the settling and development of America. It bred a race of men that evolved the railroad, the telegraph, the telephone, the typewriter, and all of the other quickening inventions of the age. Speed became the one great necessity. The days of slow journeys, long letter writing, etc., were past. Men now began to ruch into the cities on fast trains. They made fortunes in stock exchanges by methods which depended for success on the difference in time between the East and the West. They rushed out to quick lunches which were swallowed in the interval of so many business deals, and they rushed home again while they scanned successive editions of newspapers which contained information of all the world, in most cases not one hour old. Their wives and children partook of this rush and bustle in greater or lesser degree. And all this in spite of the fact that their ancestors had prepared them for a condition directly opposite to the existing one. To be sure, after several generations the race has worked itself into step—it may be said to have come up abreast of its environment, but the effect physically has been detributed to heart disease.

Dr. Thomas E. Satterthwaite of New York, who is lated that the majority of persons, in the United States of its environment, but the effect physically has been the generating of maladies which frequently leave men dead in bed, in office, or in the frenzied pursuit of amusement. The blame for most of these fatalities has been attributed to heart disease.

Dr. Thomas E. Satterthwaite of New York, who is on the staff of the Post Graduate and the Orthopaedic hospitals, has been to Bad Nauheim to study the treatment, and is now practicing it in America. He was asked to describe it and to talk about some of the curious aspects of the great American malady. He said:

"The heart, being the central pumping station for all the rapidly moving currents of the human body, is naturally very susceptible of changes that may take place in those currents. It may vary greatly in bulk during twenty-four hours. Its beat may go down to fifty and up to 300. If a man stands up or lies down, the difference in his position will cause the heart to vary ten teats a minute, or 600 an hour. When we think that each one of these lost or gained beats alters the speed of the blood through the veins, we get some idea of what slight changes in this organ may mean to the body at large, for the above change is what takes place in a healthy man; in a diseased man the difference becomes much greater. It is curious, also, that the heart sometimes murnurs when its owner is lying down in a way that cannot be detected when he is standing. These sounds vary with age and with health. Vlerordt studied them. He placed a number of flat pieces of gutta percha, shaped like poker chips, on the chests of men, women and children. He piled these chips one above the other just over the heart, until they formed a solid column. Then he placed his ear to the top of the pile and listened. If the sound of the heart could not be heard through the pile, Vierordt removed the chips from the top of the pile one by one, until it could be heard. In this way he got a comparison of the intensity of the sounds. He confirmed the idea that different parts of the heart made different so found that in forcing the blood to the nerve centers the volume of the pulse was increased, while at the same time its rate was diminished. As this result was desirable when treating loss of compensation in heart disease, they applied the method in chronic cases with such satisfactory results that it has been recognized and employed by many of the best practitioners in Eu-

Prof. George Oliver of England had shown that a "Prof. George Oliver of England had shown that a healthy arm, after being exercised, displaced more water in a vessel than it did before it was exercised. This was attributed to the fact that the blood thickened during exercise. Prof. Schott at Nauheim knew that walking smartly across a room would often diminish the rapidity and increase the force, for the time being, of a weakly acting heart. He decided to treat the heart for its development as he would any other muscular organ of the body. He proceeded to treat it from the standpoint of the relation of exercise to growth. All bodily organs which are exercised, grow; any organ which is not exercised, ceases its develop-ment. Prof. Schott determined to exercise the heart. "The treatment involved first a series of preparatory baths in the waters of the natural springs which exist "The treatment involved first a series or preparatory baths in the waters of the natural springs which exist in Nauheim. The stimulating effect of these waters prepares the sufferer for the exercise which follows. The exercise involves every muscle in the body. No apparatus is used. The patient is told to make certain motions which bring certain muscles into play, but when he tries to do it an attendant catches him by the arm, or the leg, whichever part is to be moved, and tries to stop the movement. The patient must do it in spite of the attendant, the "resistance" causing him more exof the attendant, the "resistance" causing him more exertion than if he were left unobstructed. In consequence the houses of Nauheim seem at times to be full of men and women wrestling with one another. One man will be seen swinging his hands over his head like a human windmill, while an attendant stands beside him on a chair, holding his wrists and trying to stop him. Another man will be found standing on one leg and moving the other violently, while an attendant holds on grimly to his ankle and will not be shaken off. Still another, standing with his back to the wall, seems bent on falling flat on his face in spite of the attendant, who persistently props him up as he comes forward. who persistently props him up as he comes forward. Others around about seem to be indulging in sparring matches, the attendants in every case resisting the movements of their charges. All of these people are under treatment for heart disease.

"In other parts of the place men, women and children are being bathed, some of them in brine, others in water which is hardly brackish. The newcomer is given a simple bath in the water of the springs, which has been freed from carbonic acid and diluted with fresh warm water. After a few days the fresh warm water is left out and he gets the spring water at normal temperature, but with most of the carbonic acid extracted. Next he is put into a bath tub which is charged with the salts and carbonic just as it emerges from the earth. The fourth and final stage of the bathing seances calls for a bath like the one just mentioned, except that the water is allowed to run in and out of the tub constantly. None but a quite vigorous person can take this form of bath without ill-effect. These baths are really the first stage of the exercise reatment, and tub constantly. None but a quite vigorous person can take this form of bath without ill-effect. These baths are really the first stage of the exercise treatment, and they are given to diminish the frequency and to increase the force of the pulse beat.

"When the patient comes for treatment it is usually found that his heart is clogged and dilated with blood. The first thing to do then, naturally, is draw this blood as far away from the central organ as possible. The heated bath is the beginning of the process of withdrawal. The capillaries of the skin are relieved of their natural store of blood and some of the over-supply in the heart rushes out to supply the loss. In the second stage of the bathing the carbonic gas numbs the skin, practically paralyzes the capillaries and increases the rush of blood from the heart. In the third form of bath the chloride of calcium sets up an irritation which makes the body appear as if covered with nettle rash. It is the advanced stage of the process by which the heart is relieved of overwork. It prepares the patient for the exercise that follows.

"Hundreds have been benefited by the Nauheim treatment, but there are famous cases which stand out prominently from the rest. These cases naturally are the constant subject of talk by the newcomers who go to take the baths. There was the broken-down Englishman, 50 years old, who was carried into Nauheim, help-less from heart disease, gout, dyspepsia, and enlarged liver. He could not walk a step. They cut down his take the baths. There was the broken-down Englishman, 50 years old, who was carried into Nauhelm, helpless from heart disease, gout, dyspepsia, and enlarged liver. He could not walk a step. They cut down his food supply at once, allowing him about half of what he really wanted to eat. They bathed him in diluted water at first, gradually increasing the strength of the solution. At the end of a week he could walk a little, and he began to take a constitutional of five yards a day. Then they exercised him lightly, increasing the resistance and the work as the days went on. His daily routine was about as follows: He arose at 8; breakfasted on soft boiled eggs, weak coffee, and Zwieback at 8:30; bathed at 9:30; slept at 10 for an hour; exercised at 11; rested from 12 to 1, when he dined; rested an hour; went to walk at 3; returned and rested until 6, when he dined; retired at 9 p.m. He was allowed but one cigar a day in deference to his demands (although no tobacco should be allowed in any form.) and only the sour wines. At the end of four months he could walk five miles a day, and he was discharged apparently without an ailment.

"But it is not necessary to go to Germany to see wonderful results of the treatment. There was Dr. Guernsey, editor of the Medical Times, who some months ago could not walk half a block. He weighed 376 pounds and was 76 years old. He had been a corpulent man many years, and had also suffered from subacute rheumatism. His pulse was feeble, intermittent and usually absent in the left wrist. He was taking, along with and was 76 years old. He had been a corpulent man many years, and had also suffered from subacute rheumatism. His pulse was feeble, intermittent and usually absent in the left wrist. He was taking, along with other drugs, tincture of digitalis, which is usually the last stage in the drug line for cases like this. His face was pallid and the apex of his heart was situated outside of the left nipple, whereas in the normal heart it is decidedly inside. He was put on the modified Nauheim resistance exercise treatment with baths. At first the baths were warm and salt and lasted but five minutes, with lengthy intermissions. At the end of the second week they were carbonated and the digitalis was stopped. To make a long story short, he grew better steadily. After some months' treatment, his weight had fallen forty pounds, he attended daily to his professional routine of business while in the city, and made long trips out of town in consultation cases, where he was obliged from the necessity of the case to walk long distances in going to and from the train. I could cite a number of such cases.

"This treatment is not, as many might think, allied to the Swedish movement cure. The latter is violent, while the Nauheim treatment is a slow process, both in while the Nauheim treatment is a slow process, both in practice and in development. In fooling with such a dangerous malady as heart disease, one has to be care-ful or there might be a collapse. For this reason, I should not advise anyone to undertake the reason, it except under the care of a skilled operator—preferably one who had personally studied the German method. If gymnasium instructors were to take it up, for instance, I am afraid they could not be thoroughly impressed with the absolute necessity of going slow. Every movement should be made as slowly as possible, and the rests between each movement are guite as important as ment should be made as slowly as possible, and the rests between each movment are quite as important as the movement itself. On the other hand, I believe the cure can be carried on with even better effect in America than in Germany. Schott has no exclusive right to the baths. They are public affairs under the control of the government, and there are twenty doctors in Nauheim glving the treatment. The baths, too, are open only during the summer months. In America our excellent plumbing arrangements are well adapted to the purpose. In Nauheim the patients have to go in the day time and stand around in the open, waiting to cool off. Here, we give the baths at bedtime with much greater effect. The difficulty of procuring a substitute for the Nauheim salts will have to be bridged by the family physician. I believe the crystallized product of the baths can be imported, but the ingredients can be produced chemically. If you can obtain sea salt, chloride of calcium, bicarbonate of soda, muriatic acid and a bath tub, you will have all of the essentials of the Nauheim bath, but I should not care to put these chemicals into the hands of the inexperienced layman. He might do damage to himself and the tub. Better; go to a chemist and have him mix you up the necessary ingredients. Almost any doctor should be able to give a chemist and have him mix you up the necessary ingredients. Almost any doctor should be able to give the prescription. The bath should be only slightly saline at first, gradually increasing in strength as the days go forward. Do not attempt the strong solution at first or it might have bad effects. After all, the best way is simply to go to your family physician and tell him you want the Nauheim treatment. If he is up-to-date, he will be able to give it to you without sending you to Germany. you to Germany.

you to Germany.

"Personally, I have had no bad results from the Nauheim treatment. On the contrary, I feel that it introduces a new era in cardiac therapeutics. But in saying this I must state that success means that the patient must surrender himself to requirements of a systematic course, and the physician must have daily acquaintance with the condition of his patient. There should be a definite system as to diet, baths, etc., but the physician must be prepared to modify them if necessary, and that means, in every case. The best results are, of course, obtained by baths and exercises combined, but the exercises will accomplish good results without baths, though the course will be longer.

"In connection with this treatment I have adopted a new and simple method of showing the size and position of the heart. I draw on the skin with a pencil a line through the nipple and a vertical line from the apisternal notch to the umbilious. I then trace out by percussion the outline of the apex with an X. I then apply tracing paper to the chest and trace the drawing through on the paper. At each examination I make a similar tracing. In this way I have an accurate diagram of the heart, showing the changes it undergoes from time to time. In Germany, as the treatment goes on, X-ray photographs are taken of each patient, so that radical changes in the organs of the body may be watched."

"You may not know that in China the majority of the firecrackers with which we celebrate our day of national independence are made by the Chinese in their homes. Contractors for fireworks give each man a certain amount of powder, and that must be made into a given number of crackers. The paper used in the manufacture he buys himself—and paper is not a cheap commodity in China. The powder furnished seldom fills the required number of crackers, but that does not disturb the Celestial in the least; he turns in his quota, all the same, and the American boy, in consequence, invariably finds in each package of firecrackers a few that "won't go off."

HEROIC SACRIFICE.

HIGH-WATER MARK OF HEROISM IN THE CIVIL WAR.

By a Staff Contributor.

MMORTALIZED by Tennyson's imperishable lines, the world has generally accepted the charge of Lord Cardigan's Light Brigade at Balaklava as the acme of military heroism. Yet the feat of the "Noble Six Hundred" in that memorable battle has been paral-leled and even excelled in heroic sacrifice by bodies of American troop who charged while

"Cannon to the right of them, Cannon to the left of them, Cannon to the left of them, Cannon to troot of them, Cannon in front of the sacrifice of an entire company, battalion or regiment depended the turning of the tide of battle and the saving of the day to an army which otherwise would have been doomed to utter defeat.

During the civil war in this country there occurred a number of charges quite as thrilling in all respects as the charge of the Light Brigade in the Crimea. The only difference between the heroism of the "Six Hundred," and that of the handful of soldiers of the Union and of the Confederacy who charged an army "while all the world wondered," is that England had a poet for the occasion, who set forth the valor of her heroic sons in rhyme which will command the admiration of the world so long as the English language shall endure, while no gifted bard has embalmed in verse of sufficient power the similar deeds of valor perfermed by American heroes.

One of the Unsung Deeds of Valor.

On the second day of July, 1863, just thirty-six years ago today, there occurred at Gettysburg, Pa., an incident of which history has taken little note, but of which Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock remarked: "There is no more gallant deed in history. I was glad to find such a body of men at hand willing to make the terrible sacrifice that the occasion demanded. I ordered those men in because I saw that I must gain five minutes' time. Reinforcements were coming on the run, but I knew that before they could reach the threatened point, the Confederates, unless checked, would seize the position. I would have ordered that regiment in if I had known that every man would be killed. It had to be done."

The regiment referred to by Gen. Hancock as hav-

The regiment referred to by Gen. Hancock as hav-ing made "the terrible sacrifice" was the First Minne-sota Volunteer Infantry, one honored survivor of which sota Volunteer Infantry, one honored survivor of which has for nearly ten years been connected with the Los Angeles police department, and than whom there is no more capable and respected officer on the force. This man is Patrol Driver S. B. Stites, who bears on his person today a scar received in that memorable conflict of thirty-six years ago. Officer Stites is a modest man, not given to boasting of the part he took in the defense of his country, but he feels an honest pride in the achievements of his old regiment, which was one of the first volunteer organizations to be mustered into the service of the Union at the outbreak of the civil war, and one of the last—what was left of it—to be mustered out at the close. From the first battle of Bull Run, through all the campaigns of the Army of the Potmac, till the surrender of Lee at Appomatof the Potomac, till the surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the First Minnesota was in the thick of the fight. The hsitory of the regiment is almost a history of the war in Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, but it was at Gettysburg, on the second and third days of the battle, that the First Minnesota received its severest baptism of fire, resulting almost in the extermination of the entire command.

The first historian to call attention to the conspicuous valor of the First Minnesota in the battle of Gettysburg is Ira S. Dodd, a veteran of the civil war, who, in a volume recently issued and entitled, "The Song of the Rappahannock—Sketches of the Civil War," speaks of it as "the high-water mark of heroic sacrifice." Mr. Dodd gives the following graphic description of the sacrifice of the regiment by Gen. Hancock in order to gain five minutes' time on which the fate of the army for the moment seemed to depend:

Story of the First Minnesota.

Story of the First Minnesota Story of the First Minnesota.

"The story of the First Minnesota at Gettysburg seems almost an anachronism in this nineteenth century. It carries one back to the heroic ages with a suggestion of the Iliad or of the Spartans at Thermopylae. Its truly modern phase is the matter-of-fact manner in which our military historians pass it by with barest mention as a mere tactical nicident of a wholesale battlefield, and the consequent ignorance of the American public concerning one of the most roman-wholesale battlefield, and the consequent ignorance of the American public concerning one of the most romantic incidents of our history.

"Minnesota was too young in those days to have many native sons, and her generous quota of volunteers was filled with scions of that truest American aristocracy, the commonwealth founders whose motto is 'Westward, Ho!' Out of eastern homes, scattered all the way from Maine to Michigan, these bold spirits had come to the North Star State to carve careers for themselves, and their country's call to arms met with quick and whole-souled response. The First Minnesota Regiment was fortunate in its commanders. Three colonels had risen from it to the command of brigades, two of them, regular army officers, under whose rigid two of them, regular army officers, under whose rigid schooling the regiment gained a high reputation for discipline and efficiency. But Colvill, who commanded at Gettysburg, was a typical westerner, tall, ungainly, with strong and homely face of the Lincoln stamp. It is said that when his turn for promotion came he at first said that when his turn for promotion came he at first refused, thinking himself unfit; but the moment of supreme trial showed his mistaken modesty.

"Perhaps you have seen a thunder-cloud lie black and threatening in the west on a sultry summer day. Slowly it masses its lurid hulk, while you ask yourself anxiously where and when it will strike. So Meade and his generals, unprepared as yet with their scattered corps slowly arriving, watched Lee's army on the 2d of July, the really decisive day of Gettysburg; for Pickett's grand charge on the morrow was but a last desperate attempt to retrieve an already lost cause.

The Marshalled Storm Breaks.

"About 4 o'clock in the afternoon the marshalled storm marched forth roaring in the fury of Longstreet's tremendous assault upon the exposed line of our Third Corps, and from then until dark, along the Emmettsburgh road, in the peach orchard, about Throstle's farmhouse, amid the rocks of the Devil's Den, up and over Round Top, to and fro through the bloody wheatfield such a combat raged as the world had not seen since Waterloo.

since Waterloo.

"Away at the rear, a mile behind the battle's outmost edge, on the slope of that ridge, against which the storm spent itself at last, Battery C, Fourth United States Artillery, goes into position, and the First Minnesota, weakened now by the detachment of two companies for other duty, is ordered to its support. The eight companies number 262 men, a siender battalion, for their dead and wounded have been left behind on a score of hard-fought fields.

"Unlike many of our battles, Gettysburg was fought in the open country, and from the vantage ground a score of hard-fought fields.

"Unlike many of our battles, Gettysburg was fought in the open country, and from the vantage ground upon which the little regiment stood the scene of strife was spread before them in full view. With eager eyes and anxious hearts they watch the fury of the oncoming tempest. For half an hour it sways hither and thither; the pressure upon our too-extended lines is becoming fearful. Can the Third Corps men endure it? No; slowly, grimly, stubbornly fighting they are borne backward. There is a bad break yonder at the peach orchard, a very wrestle of demons about Bigelow's guns at Throstle's; in the wheatfield the ripening grain is sodden with the wine of that dark harvest which the Pale Reaper is gathering; he is triumphant now. The moments have counted out almost an hour of deepening disaster. The advance guard of the storm, the wreck sent hustling before the gale, is sweeping up the slope. Around the flaming battery, past the silent, solid line of the First Minnesota pours the pallid throng of wounded and of fugitives, the fragments of torn regiments, and behind it all, with awful impact, the storm advances, rolling inward like an oncoming tide. Its advancing waves are breaking at the very foot of the slope, when a new spirit appears upon the scene. Hancock has come. Without waiting for the reinforcements following at his order, he rides alone into the very vortex of the hellish din. His masterful presence is like magic. Order begins to shape itself out of the confusion, a new line of resistance is quickly patched from rallied regiments, rendered hopeful by word that help is coming. But before the new line is complete, while as yet a yawning gap is unfilled, from behind a clump of trees the Confederate brigades of Wilcox and Barksdale suddenly emerge. They see their opportunity, and, flushed with victory, with wild yells they charge directly at the gap in the new line. Consternation seizes everyone. The gunners of the battery begin to desert their pieces; the First Minnesota is left alone. But that regiment has never been known to disobey an order, and its men stand firm. It is one of those moments big with fate whose issue can be met only by lightning-like decision and supreme sacrifice. Hancock's glance lights upon the little lonely unbroken regiment. Instantly he is beside Colvill. Pointing to the advancing masses, he says:

"Do you see those lines? Charge them!" silent, solid line of the First Minnesota pours the pallid says:

"'Do you see those lines? Charge them!'
"Colvill's answer is the command: 'Att 'Attention, batlion! Forward, double quick!'

"Every man knew what it meant. It was a call to death, but not one hesitated. Down the gentle slope they go in perfect order, 260 against 3000. The Confederate line, blazing with fire, is now only a short hundred, yards away. The ranks of the little regiment are rapidly thinned, but they go forward faster and faster. One of them said:

"'We were only afraid there wouldn't be enough of us left by the time we reached them to make any impression on the enemy."

"At the bottom of the slope is a little brook, its bed dry with summer heat, its banks lined with bushes. The enemy reach it first, and the rough crossing somewhat disorders their front line. Colvill seizes his desperate chance: 'Charge!' He roars the command, and down come the bayonets in level gleaming row, and "Every man knew what it meant. It was a call to "The front line of the enemy recoils, breaks, its men fiee backward and throw the second line into contusion. The brook's bed is empty now. Again Colvill clutches the moment: 'Halt! Fire!'

"It is frightfully short range, the volley is feeble only in volume, for every shot tells, and there is a hideous gap in the disordered brown ranks.

"Then the heroes fling themselves into the bed of the brook. It is a good extemporary fife nit. They have brook. It is a good extempore rifle pit. They have but one care now, they will obey, not only the letter but the spirit of their orders, they will hold back that threatening mass while they can, and sell their lives dearly. They fire carefully, calmly, every shot meant to hit and hurt; and for a few moments longer fear of that desperate little wasp's nest in the brook holds thousands in check. But only for a few moments. The wasp's nest must be exterminated, and from the front of them, from the right of them, from the left of them, a concerted and increasingly fatal fire rains. Fainter and fainter come the answering ring of rifle shots from the little brook. The bed is no longer dry, it runs with the fittle brook. The bed is no considered blood.

"But at last Hancock's reinforcements arrive. He has not forgotten his foriorn hopes. Not a regiment but a brigade, two of them, three of them, he hurries to the rescue, and 'the First Minnesota is relieved.'

High-water Mark of Herolsm.

"Fifteen minutes ago they were 262. Now there are forty-seven able to stand up and be counted! But not one is 'missing.' No prisoners have been taken from their ranks, none have shirked or deserted. Only one man of the color-guard remains, but he carries out their gloriously torn flag in triumph. Colvill is desperately wounded, all the field officers have fallen, only one captain is left. Two hundred and fifteen, out of 262, lie along the slope or in the bloody little brook. This is the high-water mark of heroic sacrifice.

"One might have thought the First Minnesota extinguished. Far from it. At nightfall the two outlying companies came in, and with the forty-seven survivors a miniature battalion was formed in command of the brave surviving captain. On the eventful morrow, the day of final victory, the First Minnesota was again in the thick of the storm where the topmost waves of Pickett's charge spent their fury. And as though conscious that common work was no longer fit for them, they bore themselves with exaltation. A shot cut away the staff of their precious colors and killed the last man of the color-guard. Instantly the standard was seized by another hand and borne far forward into the thick of the fight; a flag was wrested from the enemy, and after the battle their shattered staff was spliced with the captured one. But their captain and sixteen good men were added to the roll of sacrifice."

curate description of the affair.

"The historian has not in the least exaggerated the work of the regiment at Gettysburg, or the fearful losses it sustained there," said he. "We who participated in the charge and the carnage in the bed of the dry brook did not think at the time that our experience was extraordinary. By almost continuous fighting since our enlistment in the spring of '61, we had become inured to the dangers of battle, and there was no task to which we could have been assigned in the line ow duty that we would not unshrinkingly have attempted. It is only when we view our adventures in the light of history that we realize that our conduct is entitled at least to honorable mention, if not properly classed as heroic.

is entitled at least to honorable mention, it not properly classed as heroic.

"Undoubtedly, Gen. Hancock meant what he said, every word of it, when he ordered the First Minnesota into that awful breach. Certainly every man would have obeyed even had he known that it meant sure death to the whole command. In that respect, our regiment did not differ from many others in both the Northern and Southern armies, for the civil war was one in which men valued principle more than human death to the whole command. In that respect, our regiment did not differ from many others in both the Northern and Southern armies, for the civil war was one in which men valued principle more than human life, as the pages of history amply show. It was simply our luck to be in a position where sacrifice was needed. Any other regiment of the scores engaged would have obeyed as readily."

Officer Stites was a sergeant of Co. E of the gallant old First Minnesota, when the regiment played such an important part in turning the tide of the rebellion at Gettysburg. It kept him busy helping to close up the ranks as men fell while the regiment was making its famous charge. He escaped unhurt untilater the remnant of the little band reached the bed of the dry brook. While lying there, loading and firing as rapidly as he could at the massed ranks of gray, at such close range that almost every shot found a living mark, a spent ball struck him in the right arm, just below the shoulder, inflicting a painful, but not dangerous wound. The bullet, after tearing his flesh, dropped out of the end of his sleeve. His wound disabled him from participating in the fighting on the following day, but he got out of the hospital in sufficient time to take part in subsequent battles.

Sergt. Stites had a younger brother in the regiment who also was wounded in the fight at the dry brook on the field of Gettysburg. His eldest brother enlisted in the Third Minnesota, was taken prisoner at Murfreesboro, paroled, and subsequently wounded while fighting Indians in Minnesota. Of four brothers, all but one received wounds in the service of their country. The one who remained at home to care for his parent, died a natural death while the others were shedding their blood on the field of battle.

Officer Stites was born in St. Clair county, Ill., sixteen miles east of St. Louis, nearly sixty-three years ago. He emigrated with his parents to Minneapolis in 1855. He enlisted in the First Minnesota, April 29, 1861, under the first all for 75,000 voluntee Officers of the Regiment.

The First Minnesota was commanded by five different colonels during the war. The first was Col. Gorman, a Mexican war veteran, who was soon promoted to the rank of brigadier-general. Col. Dana, a regular army officer, who succeeded to the command, also became a brigadier, as did Col. Sully, another regular army officer, who was the third commander of the regiment. The fourth was Col. Morgan, promoted from the captaincy of Co. E, who resigned on account of ill-health, and died soon afterward at home. The fifth and last colonel of the regiment was Colvill, who led the charge at Gettysburg, and was severely wounded there. He was promoted from the captaincy of Co. F. After the sacrifice at Gettysburg there were not enough survivors to constitute a regiment. It existed thereafter only as a battalion, and a small one at that.

Present survivors of the regiment are few, but there are some men of renown among them. One of them is Judge Lochren, Commissioner of Pensions under the second Cleveland administration. Another is Maj. H. D. O'Brien, editor of the Picket Guard, a G.A.R. paper, published at St. Louis, Mo. Gen. H. L. Gordon, proprietor of the Gordon Block on Broadway, just below Second street, this city, also belonged to the famous organization.

That flag represents the President of the United States and nobody else, and should not be lowered except in the event of his death. When Justice Miller died Mr. Cleveland had the flag lowered, and people who knew the true use of the flag thought the President was dead. One of our men attempted to enlighten Mr. Cleveland on the subject when the order was issued, but he came on the subject when the order was issued, but he came near getting fired by the President, who gave it out straight from the shoulder that he knew all about what the flag was there for, Mr. Cleveland was never open to conviction, but exercised his authority as boss of the ranch, regardless of usages and laws."—[Washington

Through some blunder at the baggage room he was given the checks for a pair of big packing cases belonging to an oil stove drummer, and never discovered the error until he opened them up at his destination. He had made the trip in a suit of brown knickerbockers, and, owing to a delay en route, arrived just before the hour set for the ceremony. The wedding was to be a very swell affair, and when the poor fellow saw the oil stoves he went nearly crazy. Oil stoves are all right in their place, but a man can't very well get married in one of them, so he had to go and meet the bridal party in his old brown knickerbockers, which hadn't been improved, I can assure you, by his long journey. The punctilious Mexicans were scandalized, and the bride almost went into hysterics. Queer part about it was that after he got back home with his wife the very first person that called was a smoothlooking chap carrying a handbag. 'I hear you are just setting up housekeeping,' he said, 'and I would like to show you a very valuable and interesting invention. I was an enchanted listener to my two companions until a late hour, and was much amused at Mr. Bayard's recital of an incident some years before in which he and Travers were actors. He sa'd that the rats had become such a nuisance in his house at Washington and were so aggressive that he went to New York in search of a terrier and applied to Travers for information as to where he could find an establishment provided with such animals. Travers took him to a rat pit, whose proprietor was a celebrated sporting character, and Bayard stated the purpose of his visit and that he must see the dog tried before he would purchase him.

(VIII) FRESH LITERATURE.

Kipling's Book of Travel.

T IS not with entire amiability that Rudyard Kipling has put together in book form the letters of travel which he wrote on his way from India to England, via the United States, at the beginning of his career. For in the preface to the work he says: these two volumes I have got together the bulk of the special correspondence and occasional articles written by me for the Civil and Military Gazette between 1887-1889. I have been forced to this action by the enterprise of various publishers, who, not content with disinterring old newspaper work from the decent seclusion of office files, have in several instances seen fit to embellish it with additions and interpolations." All honestly-minded men and women must wish Mr. Kipling success in his crusade against tho unscrupulous publishers, who flour-ish and grow rich while the authors upon whose wares they fatten do nothing but fume. Nevertheless, all his admirers will be secretly thankful that the unscrupulous publishers forced him to the issuing of this book. For the world would have been the poorer by so many pages of delightful entertainment had these letters of travel remained "in the decent seclusion of office files." The work is in two volumes and comprises "Letters of Marque," a series of letters written during November and December, 1887, descriptive of a trip taken by Mr. Kipling to certain places in India more or less out of the general line of travel; "From Sea to Sea," dated March-September, 1889, the letters which he wrote on his trip from India to England, via China, Japan and the United States; "City of Dreadful Night," a description of Calcutta, dated January-February, 1888; "Among the Railway Folk," "The Girideh Coal Fields," and "In An Opium Factory," descriptive of phases of life in India, and "The Smith Administration," a collection of unimportant sketches written between 1887 and 1888. "From Sea to Sea," is probably the division of the book that will most interest Americans, because it contains the letters, only very slightly amended, concerning this country, whose publication, unauthorized by Mr. Kipling, some eight or nine years ago, aroused so much unnecessary ill-temper against the young author. It is interesting, and very gratifying, to find that Mr. Kipling has stood bravely, to his guns and by this act of authorized publication has shown that he has seen no reason to change the views which he then formed. Even the famous account of the Bohemian Club banquet in San Francisco, over which our sister city roared with pain, is just as amusing in its good-natured ridicule as it always was to everybody outside of San Francisco. That touch-me-not city has not yet forgiven the liberty which Mr. Kipling took with its idiosyncracies and one of its leading papers, in the soreness of still wounded pride, the other day declared that his account of the dinner was "malicious," It is difficult to see why anyone should ever have winned under the adverse criticisms which Mr. Kipling sometimes makes in these letters. For he was so evidently an honest-minded openthe world would have been the poorer by so many pages of delightful entertainment had these letters of travel remained "in the decent seclusion of office files."

stories, many of the "Plain Tales from the Hills" and, indeed nearly the greater portion of the best-known of his short stories. And there is no disappointment in store for whoever sits down to read the book with that thought in mind. Every now and then one comes upon something that must have been the germ of one or another character or scene or incident in his early short or-later long stories. For instance, on the way to China there is on board the ship a dreadful American child of 8 years who, one feels sure, must have been "Harvey" in "Captains Courageous," before that dreadful youth grew to older and still more dreadful years. In "Letters of Marque" these suggestive scenes and incidents are especially frequent. There one finds occasionally the original of things which afterward appeared in "The Naulahka," and in the terror in which he hurried away from the Gau Mukh spring at Chitor one recognizes the forerunner of the impressions which possessed and haunted the sturdy six-footer from Colorado, who stumbled into the uncanny place.

haunted the sturdy six-footer from Colorado, who stumbled into the uncanny place.

From a literary point of view, "Letters of Marque" is the best part of the book. It is an artistic blend of descriptions of all manner of strange and interesting things seen by keen young eyes, of strongly felt and vividly described impressions, of bits of history and tradition, all fused into a succession of pictures as brillant as any that Kipling has ever made. "From Sea to Sea" is less artistic in both construction and finish, as perhaps, from the nature of the work, it was bound to be. But it has qualities of perspeciety in observation to be. But it has qualities of perspicicity in observation and of quick-comprehension of things and people and principles, touches of description sometimes light-heartedly whimsical, sometimes poetic and sometimes sarcastic that put it above the level of ephemeral, newspaper work. "The City of Dreadful Night" is not the short tory upon which he effectived between the city of work. "The City of Dreadful Night" is not the short story upon which he afterward bestowed the same title, but is a description of Calcutta, wh'ch sets forth in spirited style some things in that city which ought to have been otherwise. It is, therefore, almost entirely of local and temporary interest and is worthy of attention only because of the way in which it is done. The three shorter pieces in the book are very strong, vivid and dramatic descriptions of phases of local life. Most of the sketches which make up "The Smith Administration" are things which Mr. Kiphing would undoubtedly have preferred to leave in their coffins, the newspaper files, if the unscrupulous publishers had not forced him to resurrect them. But there are two or three, notably "The Bride's Progress," a description of the horrors of Benares, which are worth preserving because of the remarkable quality of their word pictures.

Capt. Mahan's Life of Nelson.

Capt. Mahan's Life of Nelson.

Capt. A. T. Mahan's "Life of Nelson" is universally recognized as the ablest portrait of England's great sea commander and the most masterly presentation of his embodiment, for so many years, of Great Britain's power at sea. Little, Brown & Co. have just issued a second edition, revised, and contained in one volume instead of two, of this important work. In the preface to this edition the author speaks of the two chief criticisms which have been made upon the work since it was first published, namely, his opinion concerning Nelson's actions toward the Neapolitan republicans in 1799, and his estimate of Nelson's affection for his wife. Concerning the first of these, he has recast and amplified the discussion of the subject, but declares that he has seen no cause to change the opinion he first expressed. Concerning the other matter, he has embodied in the text no cause to change the opinion he first expressed. Concerning the other matter, he has embodied in the text some of the recently found letters from Nelson to his wife, but he has not thought that they present any reason for changing the treatment which he gave to the subject in the first edition. A number of minor details have also been amplified and corrected, but Capt. Mahan closes the preface with this statement: "In the author's judgment, his previous presentment of Nelson's character and conduct is not affected in the slightest degree by these changes. They are part of the frame, not of the picture." The new single volume contains all the portraits, which are remarkably fine illustrations, and all of the maps and battle plans which were contained in the first edition of two volumes.

Miss Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler published about a year ago a novel entitled "Concerning Isabel Carnaby," which attracted a good deal of attention and had many very complimentary things said about it. The book was especially commended for its brilliancy. She has just followed up her first success with a second novel which bears the title, "A Double Thread." This new story is a very clever performance and the people in it are all remarkably clever people. In fact, they are so very clever and are so constantly occupied in saying brilliant things to one another that there is not much chance for anything else in the story. If Miss Fowler had only applied to herself some of those epigrams which her characters so frequently scatter about them concerning clever women, and had concealed some of her own cleverness, she might have made a more interesting novel. But if we must have the novel of conversation in which people sit around and talk from one end of the book to the other, it is, however, a great relief to find a novel of that sort in which the people are not stupid, in which they say brilliant things as easily as they say good morning and utter epigrams as unconsciously as they breathe. In this department of the art of fiction Miss Fowler excels most other English-writing novelists. Henry Seton Merriman is the only other one who can equal her in this sort of sword play between his characters, and he cannot, or does not, fill as many uninterrupted pages with clever conversation as she can and does. But in that respect she falls far below him in the sense of proportion. For she lets her facility run away with her sense of artistic fitness. In "A Double Thread" there are many, many pages of clever, even brilliant talk which is interesting and entertaining, which one reads with amusement, but which is a blemish to the book. It does not help to reveal the characters, does not assist in the development of the story, does nothing, in short, but make known how clever the author is. The tale is concerned with the mystery of the lives of twin sisters who were adopted in infancy, the one by a rich and the other by a proor grand. Author of "When Knighthood Was in Flower." author is. The tate is concerned with the injustery of the lives of twin sisters who were adopted in infancy, the one by a rich and the other by a poor grandparent. An army captain falls in love with the poor one and is threatened with disinheritance by his uncle, who wants him to marry the heiress. There is much one and is threatened with disinheritance by his uncle, who wants him to marry the heiress. There is much trouble, a famous pink diamond belonging to Elfrida Harland, the heiress, disappears, and Ethel, the twin sister, who is supposed to have stolen it, gives it to her lover, the captain. By the time everybody is pretty well involved in the complications it turns out that Ethel Harland is simply Elfrida, masquerading as a poor governess under the name of her sister, who had died many years before. The structure of this portion of the story Miss Fowler has managed very well. She has kept the identities of the supposed two girls entirely separate and has worked out the twisting of the double thread with great skill and with artistic sensibility to the importance of small detail. The reader is quite as much taken in by Elfrida's mad prank as are all the other people in the book. But she has not depicted her characters with an equal care. In the delineation of her phantom people her hand has constantly wavered, and there are only three people in the book, Capt. Le Mesurier, his uncle, Sir Roger, and Lady Silverhampton, in whom it is possible for one to believe. Miss Harland, the hercine, begins by being cynical, superior, and very clever, ends by being silly, vain, affected, and in the mean time has been several other inconsistent things. Miss Fowler has undoubted gifts as a novelist, but if she will learn to blue pencil her conversations and put more care into the portraying of her characters she will be able to write much better and much more interesting novels. She is an Englishwoman, the daughter of an ex-Secretary of State for India, and previous to the publication of her first novel had brought out three volumes of verse.

Young Mistley."

Henry Seton Merriman is reported to be very indig-nant over the unauthorized publication in this country "Young Mistley," and whoever reads the novel must admit that he has every reason to feel aggrieved. It is one of his earliest attempts at novel writing and he felt it to be so crude and so unworthy the reputation and the skill which he has since achieved that some years ago he withdrew it and two others from sale in England and destroyed the plates, believing that he had secured himself, although at considerable financial loss to himself, from their farther appearance before the public. But he reckoned without those unserupulous American publishers, who for the sake of a little gain are willing to do things by the side of which outright stealing would be a virtue. In all likelihood, Mr. Merriman would rather the American publishers, who have ruthlessly and impudently reproduced in this country his early books, had fiched as much money from his pockets as they have gained by their publication of the books which he wished to suppress. To have done so would have been a less unmanly and less despicable proceeding than the course which they have pursued. The books were published before the passage of the International Copyright Law and therefore were not under its protection. Although Mr. Merriman believed he had entirely suppressed them, some copies fell into the hands of certain American firms, who, notwithstanding the expense to which the author had already put himself and his wishes in the matter, thought they saw an opportunity to trade upon the well-deserved reputation of Mr. Merriman, and proceeded to do so by republishing the books in the United States. "Young Mistley" was written a good many years ago, and it shows on every page the immature mind and the unpracticed pen. Mr. Merriman has since developed unusual skill in the construction and unfo ding of plots, but this early effort, although the author apparently thought he was giving it just that sort of a skeleton, has only a jumbled association of events, a sort of nebular hypothesis of a plot. The book does give some indication of the skill his more mature years have shown in the portraying of characte admit that he has every reason to feel aggrieved. At is one of his earliest attempts at novel writing and he felt the portraying of character, but it is done clumsily, with too heavy shading and too much emphasis upon salient points. The point in which the book shows most promise of his later achievements is in the fertile invention of incident, the faculty of making things happen, which is a much more necessary equipment of the novelist than most modern writers of fiction are willing to believe. It is that faculty, more than any other one thing, which has made Dumas the everlasting pleasure which he is to so many thousands of readers. Those who have read Mr. Merriman's later books will be most surprised by the entire absence from the pages of "Young Mistley" of that keen and cever sword play in conversation by the entire absence from the pages of "Young Mistley" of that keen and cever sword play in conversation which make them, especially "The Sowers," a constant delight. Mr. Merriman is a master in the use of that sort of conversation. The talk of his characters is easy and brilliant, but it always has a purpose and it always achieves that purpose with very great eleverness. But of all this there is absolutely nothing in "Young Mistley," not a flash of wit, not an epigram, not an instance of repartee. One would think it to be written by an extremely serious-minded young person, who disapproved of humor and had never heard that there is such a thing as wit. Mr. Merriman has every reason in the world to be deeply aggrieved and highly indignant over the publication of this book.

[Young Mistley. By Henry Seton Merriman. A. Mackel & Co.: New York. For sa'e by Stoll & Thayer.]

Apparently, the publication of "Dross" in this country has the sanction of its author, Henry Seton Morriman. It bears internal evidence of having been written about five or six years ago and it shows the manner and the method of his mature years. The publishers of the book are a reputable firm, and Mr. Merriman himself, so far, has made no protest, so that, although the eppyright notice bears the date of 1896, it is probable that "Dross" is published with the author's sanction. and under agreement with him. The book does or it to the reputation which Mr. Merriman has so quickly won during the last few years. It is a story of French life during the Franco-Prussian war, and much of the action takes place in Paris just before and just after the war, although the scene shifts to London, to country-houses in England and in France, and the climax of the plot takes place in the Alps and at Genoa. It is a skilffully constructed plot and Mr. Merriman has worked up to the climax slowly, with incessant happenings that lead inevitably to the conclusion, although the reader is kept in ignorance of what that conclusion is going to be until it breaks upon him as unexpectedly as it did upon the teller of the tale. For the story is told in the first person by the main actor in the exciting events which he relates, a young Englishman who had fied from England in a piano case to escape his creditors, but who person by the main actor in the exciting events which he relates, a young Englishman who had fled from England in a piano case to escape his creditors, but who was really a very manly and upright young fellow, notwithstanding the bad reputation he enjoyed among his disapproving relatives. He loses his heart to the pretty daughter of an old Frenchman on first sight, and secures the place of secretary to her father, in order to be in the same house with her. The old man takes a fancy to him and soon comes to lean upon him greatly. The complications began when the war broke out and the old French Vicomte' wished to transfer his wealth to England, and was persuaded by one of the mushthe old French Vicomte wished to transfer his wealth to England, and was persuaded by one of the mushroom barons of the second empire to allow his own milllons of francs to be sent by the same messenger. The money was all stolen from the Vicomte's office, the Baron dropped dead when he learned of the theft, and the old Vicomte, apparently overcome by grief over the matter, disappeared and his body was found in the Seine. Then the story of the young Englishman's search for the money and the thief, the suspicions under which he labors and the story of his love affair with the young French woman are twisted together in constant complication until the final unexpected denouement.

Mr. Merriman has failed sometimes to pick up a loose thread of his plot, notwithstanding the skill and care with which he has worked it out. But he has used incidents occasionally without having made them bear the significance to which they were entitled by the prominence given to them. This is especially true of the night prowling to political clubs on which the old Vicomte carries his secretary. But "Dross" is more carefully written in this respect than some of Mr. Merriman's recent work has been. The character drawing, as far as it goes, is excellent, although it is subordinated to the plot development, and most of the characters are sketched in with bold outlines and without much attempt at the delicacy of fine shading. Alphonse Giraud, the light-headed, brave-hearted young Parisian of the pavement, is particularly good. This book shows also the sense of sarcastic humor and the skill in conversational repartee which Mr. Merriman has developed in his more recent work. It is, altogether, an interesting book, and one which, although it is slighter in construction than some of his other works, is quite worthy of the reputation of the author of "The Sowers."

POSTURE IN MARCHING.

AUTHORITIES WHO FAVOR STOOPING RATHER THAN UPRIGHTNESS OF CARRIAGE.

Sir Edward Verney comes forward in support of the arguments advanced by two French authorities in favor of a bend or stoop in marching, as contrasted with uprightness of carriage. He says that this upright pos-ture is the one taught to the soldier, but that it re-quires the greatest expenditure of energy, and is against prolonged effort. In the case of savage tribes, mountaineers, country folk and hunters, the body is inclined forward, the knees are more or less bent and the sole of the foot falls flat on the ground. The instance is quoted of two officers, two sergeants and thirty rank and file of the One Hundred and Sixteenth Regiment and file of the One Hundred and Sixteenth Regiment of the French army, who were put under training at Nantes. After three months' instruction they marched, carrying their rifles, bayonets, 100 pounds of ammuunition per man, and food for one meal, along a hilly road, a distance of twelve and a half miles in an hour and forty-six minutes, which is at the rate of over seven miles an hour. Not one man fell out by the way. After very the first two hours they returned in three hours and miles an hour. Not one man fell out by the way. After a rest of two hours they returned in three hours and five minutes, including two halts of ten minutes each, which gives an average speed of over four and a half miles an hour. Two days afterward these same men, in heavy marching order, covered a distance of six and seven-eighths miles across fields, on hilly ground, in an hour and twenty minutes, which works out at about five and one-eighth miles an hour. At the end of their march they were at once told off to target practice, when their shooting proved superior to that off the best company of marksmen in the regiment. This was done to test whether the exertion of their rapid march had injured their capabilities as riffemen.

One of the best tributes to the late Manager Augus One of the best tributes to the late Manager Augustin Daly comes from his property man, who says the manager never tolerated cheap things on the stage in his theater. Cold tea and lager beer were never served for wine on Daly's stage, and if His Royal Highness, the Prince, was required to smoke a cigar in one of his scenes, he smoked a perfecto at the manager's expense, and not a 5-cent stogle. When champagne was opened it was the real article, imported, and of the best quality.

THE STORY OF A BRINDLE STEER AS TOLD BY HIMSELF.

By a Special Contributor.

O-O-A-R-RGH! What a hot, dusty March! What did the herder mean, I wonder, when he spoke of the dry year? It may be charming in the Inyo Mountains; but I love the moist smell of the water-cress and the cool green of fresh alfalfa springing water-cress and the cool green of fresh aharra springing along the banks of irrigation ditches. There is no pleasure in this waste of desert brush with the sharp-spined yucca trees standing in solitary stiffness, like lone sentinels in a graveyard.

How my horns ache! The hot sand bogs my hoofs, and the stinging alkali dust prickles in my dry nostrils. Even my bloodshot eyes have lost their moisture and crenitate in their hurning sockets.

Yes, it is a dry year; but it was cool in the Ojai Valley, even though the stubble was trampled into the powdery dust and the scant grass nipped even with the sod upon the green cienagas.

I think I'll stop and rest in the poor shade of this inhospital yucca. Woo! A spine pricked me—no, it was the cruel lash of this persecuting driver! I would bellow with race but my tongue is black with a feverish was the cruet hash of this persenting driver: I would bellow with rage, but my tongue is black with a feverish thirst that never visited us when we browsed in the shade of the big liveoaks and chewed our cuds with the sound of running water forever in our ears. Running water! The very thought brings the hot blood thundering to my head, and I glare impotently through the red mist that beats—beats across my rolling eyeballs.

Ah—here is a dead one! I wonder did he, too, feel the horrid dryness? What a poor, pitful thing is this red skin drawn over the shrunken carcass! The hot, dry desert wind has desiccated the tissue and it is as dry desert wind has desiccated the tissue and it is as tough as leather; but the ravens have stolen the eyes, and the marks of coyote teeth are at the shrivelled throat. I think I will stop awhile and mourn—wurrgh! That maddening lash again!

What was it I saw when the herder visited us one day, riding with a white-aproned man? I have almost forgotten. Is it not the sharp crackle of my twinbrother's skull that rattles in my ears? No; it was that devilish lash hissing through the hot, quivering air and striking across my eyes.

Aha! I was sure I could do it! That mad rush of mine through the herd has sent the whole company scattering through the could do it! That mad rush of mine through the herd has sent the whole company scattering through the brush! How that dark-faced Spaniard swears! And how I wish he would pass by where I stand, with lowered head and frothing mouth, behind this clump of blasted greasewood! There is nothing like a stampede for an exhausted steer! . . .

They are gone! I have even lost the sound of clicking horns and the spiteful bark of the hateful lash that cracked like the cowboy's pistol and stung like a giant

They are gone! I have even lost the sound of clicking horns and the spiteful bark of the hateful lash that cracked like the cowboy's pistol and stung like a giant gaidly. I can still see the cloud of dust rising, a mile away, where the level desert quivers in the flerce sunlight radiating from the red-hot sand; and—ah! I see something else, far to the eastward,—a pretty little cienaga with water—running water, and a herd of my kind grazing, peacefully upon the moist sod! To be sure, the scene dances bewilderingly; but why should it not, when my throbbing eyes whirl round and round, like the crazy water-bugs, gyrating over the surface of my favorite drinking-pool? . . The water seems to get farther away the farther I advance toward it. I do not remember ever having experienced such a thing before,—but never mind; I would run, but my feet are like lead, and I never before felt it so hard to hold up my heavy head or to walk straight forward. I think I must be very tired; but the water will refresh me.

A HAWAIIAN TEMPLE OF REFUGE.

[Caspar Whitney in Harper's Weekly:] Kawaihae's one remaining point of interest is the ruins, back on the hill, of a temple of refuge built by Kamhameha the Great. It is the very last of the Heiaus, where in the old days, during strife, the peaceful sought and obtained immunity from harm—for into these temples a man might not pursue an enemy. This ruin indicates a very substantial structure, in parallelogram form, about 220 feet long by 100 feet wide. Entrance is gained through a narrow passage between two high walls, and the interior is laid off in terraces and paved with smooth flat stones. The wall uphill is 8 feet high, and on the downhill side 20 feet high, and both are 12 feet thick at base

SISTER REPUBLICS. HOW SOUTH AMERICAN STATES CELE-BRATE THEIR INDEPENDENCE.

From Our Oun Correspondent.

ASHINGTON (D. C.,) June 26, 1899 .- Independence day in South America! It is as great an event as the Fourth of July in the United States. We are by no means the only patriotic citizens of this hemisphere. The South Americans go wild over national holidays. They have processions and parades, and the cities are alive with the noise of fire-crackers and cannon. Every house is decorated with flags and bunting. There are more flags displayed in Chile, the Argentine and Brazil than in the United States. One of the funny things about a South American city is the flag poles. They jut out from every house and every story. No one would think of putting up a business block without flagpoles. In the main streets the flag poles from the buildings opposite each other almost meet, and when the streets are narrow, as in the case of the Ouvidor, the main thoroughfare of Rio de Janeiro, the flags form a canopy or arbor over the people below.

Many of the cities arch their principal streets with iron gas pipes, upon which are globes of different colors. On independence night these globes are ablaze with lights and the national colors show out everywhere. The decoration of Montevideo, Rosario and Rio de Janeiro is remarkable as to its gas lights.. over national holidays. They have processions and Venezuela's Fifth of July.

Venezuela's Fifth of July.

Independence day in Venezuela is on the 5th of July.
I speak of it first, for Venezuela was the birthplace of South American independence. It was in Caracas that Simon Bollvar, the chief of the George Washingtons of South America, was born. He came of a good family, and was sent to Europe to be educated. He went to school in Madrid, and after a tour of France returned there to be married. He was then 19, and his bride was 16. He brought her with him to America, but had hardly arrived in Venezuela before she died of yellow fever. Upon her coffin Bolivar took an oath that he weuld not marry again. He consecrated his life to American independence, and from then on devoted him-American independence, and from then on devoted him-self to the raising of revolutions to free the country from Spain. The declaration of independence was made on July 5, 1811, and that declaration was the death-knell of Spanish authority all over South America. After many ups and downs, Bolivar finally triumphed, and made Venezuela free. He then crossed the mountains to New Granada, or Colombia, and was instrumental in freeing that country, and also Ecuador, Bolivia and Peru.

You will find statues of him in nearly all the great cities of South America, and streets are named after cities of South America, and streets are named after him in every country.

The Spanish oppressed their subjects far more than the British ever oppressed us. They held South America in servitude for 300 years. They would not allow the people to be educated. One of the Spanish kings, upon receiving a petition for the establishment of a school in one of the towns, said: "I do not consider learning proper in America." The South Americans were not allowed to read certain histories of the United States, and the sale of books of any kind without the States, and the sale of books of any kind without the sanction of the Council of the West Indies was prohibited. All of the officials during the Spanish regime were appointed from Spain. Out of the 160 viceroys there were only four who were not Spanish, and of 600 captains-general only fourteen were born in America.

The Same as in Ouba.

The cruelties of the Spanish were beyond conception The Argentines, after they had announced their declaration of independence, issued a manifesto describing them. This was on the 25th of October, 1817. The manifesto was addressed to the nations of the earth, manifesto was addressed to the nations of the earth, and it is a terrible arraignment of Spain. It is too long to quote here, but I can give a few of its items: It charges the Spaniards with wiping out the native populations. It says that entire towns have disappeared, and their inhabitants destroyed by compulsive labor. It states that Spain has systematically tried to degrade her people in America; that she has done all she could to kill off the surplus and to keep the population down. "Men have been indiscriminately killed in order to diminish the number." In some of the countries non-combatants were taken in groups into the squares and shot. One instance is mentioned where the Spanish soldiers cut off the ears of the inhabitants of one of the towns and sent a basket of them as a present to their general. After this the troops burned the town, first shutting up people in their houses in order that they might be burned to death. They charged the Spaniards with whipping old religious persons in the open squares, and also whipping women whom they had first stripped and bound to cannon, thus exposing them to shame and derision.

After a number of more charges of this kind, including the brutal killing of old men, women and children, detailing the poisoning of the water and food, the blowing-up of the soldiers' quarters, the Argentings declared their independence. They soon succeeded in establishing it, and they then crossed the mountains to give freedom to Chile.

The man who led this revolution was Gen. San Martin. He had the place in lower South America that Bolivar had in the north, and he was an equally noble character. Born in the Argentine, he was educated in Europe. He served there in the Spanish army, and at the age of 20 was fighting Moors in Africa. After he returned to South America he became the commander of the army, and was in charge of it on that march over the Andes to Chile. This expedition was a greater one than that of Napoleon over the Alps into Italy. It was successful, although it lasted for some time, and included a number of battles. Having freed Chile, San Martin went north and aided in the freedom of Peru, himself and Bolivar meeting in 1822 at Guayaquil.

Two South American Heroes.

Two South American Heroes.

There is no doubt as to the honesty of these two men. Either could have been rich beyond the dreams of avarice, but each died poor. Chile offered to make San Martin a present of 10,000 ounces of gold, or about $200,000, but he refused it. After the struggle was over he left the Argentine for Europe, having with him only $3000. He died there after years of poverty and neglect. It was through Bolivar that Bolivia became an independent nation. The new country was called Bolivia after Bolivar, and its Assembly voted him $1,000,000. Bolivar accepted the gift only on the condition that the money should be used for the emancipation of the slaves of Bolivia. The Congress of Lima elected him perpetual Dictator, and he was later on made President of Colombia. He served several terms, and then resigned from public life.

Notwithstanding his resignation, he was reëlected, but the opposition party, which controlled Congress, voted to accept his resignation and to give him a pension of $3000 a year, on condition that he would live abroad. He started for Caracas, with the intention of going to England, but died before he left Venezuela. He was much hurt by this Congressional action, and the slight is said to have hastened his death. His last words were: "My wishes are for the happiness of the people. If my death should unite them, I will go to the tomb content—yes, to the tomb! The people rend me there, but I forgive them."

I am often asked as to the honesty of South American Queer Features of South American Politics.

I am often asked as to the honesty of South American politics, and whether it is true that the republics are republics only in name. The questions are hard to answer. In most of the countries there is no political liberty such as we have, and men like Bolivar and San artin are few.

The families of the rich control the republic of Peru. The common people have no rights that the politicians are bound to respect, and there is undoubtedly much stealing in high places. In Chile about two hundred familles manage the politics and government. They practically own the country, they control the elections, and put up and down whom they please. There are, it is true, two parties, but the leaders belong to these families, and the members of the families get the fat offices.

It is not far different in the Argentine republic. The ordinary citizen knows that it would be foolish to go to the polls. Buenos Ayres is a city of 800,000 people. During my stay there there was an election, and only 20,000 votes were cast. There should have been something like 200,000. The men who own the lands usually vote their employes as they please, and managers of the elections decide how many votes each candidate is to have before the votes are put into the ballot-boxes.

It is the same in Uruguay and Paraguay, and not very much different in Brazil.

The President of Brazil.

The President of Brazil.

During my stay in Rio I met the new President of Brazil. His name is Campo Salles, and he is a man of much more than ordinary ability. He came into prominence some years ago at the time they were talking of the emancipation of the slaves. A gradual liberation had been planned, but Campo Salles got up in the convention and said that he thought the slaves should be freed there and then, and as for him, he proposed to liberate his at once. The speech created a sensation, and resulted soon after in the emancipation of the slaves. President Campo Salles is, I judge, about 50 years of age. He is a bright-eyed, dark-faced mar of medium height and good appearance. He is well educated, has traveled widely, and is a man of practical business judgment and ideas. I am told he is making a good President. a good President a good President.

Among the excitements of the average South American Fourth of July are the revolutions. The people often choose the anniversary of their independence as the day for changing rulers, and the opposition party captures the army and marches with it to the Executive Mansion and demands a change in government. There is often firing, and now and then a President is killed. It was only a couple of years ago that President Borda of Uruguay was shot by an assassin when he was coming out of the cathedral after such a celevation. There was an attematic assassinate the for-he was coming out of the cathedral after such a celebration. There was an attemnt to assassinate the former President, Monaes of Brazil, and Alfaro, the President of Ecuador, has been assaulted several times by those who hoped to kill him.

The man who is now President of Peru got there through revolution, and the President of Uruguay holds to his position largely through the Gatling guns on his roof. The night before a great holiday is always an unrestful one to a South American President. He knows that when day breaks the streets will be filled with excitable people, and he does not know what the conspirators of the opposing party have planned for the occators of the opposing party have planned for the occa-

what They Think of Us.

Since my return from South Americans regard the people of the United States. My answer is that they both admire and fear us. The war with Spain was a great eye-opener to them. They rather thought that the Spaniards were stronger than we. After the battle at Manila they changed their expressions of contempt to the words: "Los Yankees son diablos!" which, being translated, means, "The Yankees are devils."

They fear us, for they imagine that, sooner or later, we expect to take the whole of South America and make it subject to our country. You may tell them that we would not have the continent as a gift. They will smile at the statement and say, "Si, señor!" but in their hearts they believe you are lying. This is so of every country of South America, from little Paraguay to Brazil. It is especially so of the Chileans, and very much so with the Argentines.

On the other hand, the South Americans admire our government. They have modeled their constitutions after ours, and nearly all the politicians have large libraries of Americana. They know our leading men, and will talk to you of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson. There is a statue of George Washington in Caracas, put up as one of the Argentine I found a library which contained several thousand books relating to the United States. I saw hundreds of books relating to the United States. I saw hundreds of books relating to the United States. I saw hundreds of books relating to the United States. I saw hundreds of paraguay, the able editor of the Comercio, the leading paper of Brazil.

The Fourth of July is usually celebrated by our Consuls and diplomats abroad by receptions and dinners. Last year the Consul at Paraguay, a colored statesman from Tennessee, John L. Ruffin, was serenaded by the government band. He held a reception at the Consulate, and the leading Paraguayan officials paid their respects to Uncle Sam. Col. Bryan, the Minister to Brazil, gave*a big dinner that day to the Americans in Rio, taking a hotel there for the purpose

United States Colonists in South America.

United States Colonists in South America.

There is one class of our people in South America who hardly know whether to celebrate the Fourth or not. They would like to, but they do not think it consistent with their conduct in fleeing from the arms of Uncle Sam at the close of the divil war. I refer to the several colonies who left the United States for South America because the North was victorious over the South. There are two such colonies in Brazil, one about five hundred miles or more up the Amazon, near Santarem, and another at the city of Campinas, in the coffee-raising State of Sao Paulo.

The Campinas colony was very large away back in the sixties, but it has now dwindled down to about a hundred families. It is made up of Southerners, who selected Brazil as a home before slavery was abolished in the United States. They were very sore over the defeat of the South. They had been slaveholders, and when they came south they supposed, I venture, that Brazil would always have slaves.

The first who came were from Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi, but later on there were some from Texas and other States. They bought land, and some of them for a time had slaves, and several had these slaves freed by the emancipation laws of Frazil. In fact, a number of them in this way, once in the United States and the second time in South America.

I met a number of these Southerners during my stay in South America, but I have yet to talk with one who is not anxious to get back to the United States. Only a few are doing well. The most of them are in just about the same condition that they would have been had they stayed at home. They all say they exbeen had they stayed at home. They all say they expect to go back some day, but the probability is they never will. They have English schools, and although they are so few, they stick to their church denominations and have little heavens of their own. In the colony at Campinas there are Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist churches, each of which, I venture, has its special variety of hell—in expectation.

Expense of South American Travel.

Expense of South American Travet.

With this letter I close the regular series describing my South American tour. From Manaos, 1000 miles up the Amazon, I returned to Para, where I got a cargo steamer for New York. The distance from Para to New York is over three thousand miles. The time required is twelve days, and the fare was $90.

My whole South American tour, from New York to New York, including the interior trips which I made, covered a little over twenty-five thousand miles. The expenses were at times very heavy, and at times comparatively light, averaging for the tour between $9 and $10 gold a day.

RATTLER'S VENOM

INTERESTING EXPERIMENTS AS TO ITS NATURE AND ANTIDOTES.

By a Special Contributor.

HE old story that serpents "charm" is obsolete though not extinct. This is not surprising when one observes parent birds fluttering near, in defense of their nests, as the marauding snake approaches. For the same lack of opportunity for close observation by those competent to judge correctly, whisky is the chief, if not the sole remedy relied upon by physicians as an antidote for serpent venom, yet there is no proof that it is efficacious or even beneficial.

Stripped entirely of popular descriptive ornamentation and told in the plainest language, the scientific story of the rattlesnake and its venom is one of horrid fascina-

The inquiring mind would know why and how this serpent can kill with such celerity and certainty that nearly the entire animal kingdom shuns it as death it

All that is known leads to the belief, generally, that the venom of all serpents is alike in toxic character— differing only in degree of virulence. The venom of all is albuminous, and, certainly, the most delicate chemical tests show no difference between the white of an egg and serpent venom; yet how differ-ent—the one an embryo of life, the other a shadow of ent—the one an emoryo or life, the other a shadow of death.

The venom is manufactured in almond-shaped glands behind the eyes and consists, chiefly, of miscroscopic tules, which carry the venom to larger tubes at the lower side of the gland from which a small duct runs forward under the eye and thence around the upper jaw in front, where, by a peculiar enlargement of muscles, the venom is corked up until a greater force overcomes the fibrous resistance. The saber-shaped fangs are located well forward in the upper jaw. The act of opening the mouth raises the fangs from the grooves in which they lie and throws the points well forward, bringing the venom duct in direct connection with the poison gland behind the eye. Two muscles are attached to the upper jaw on each side, above the poison gland, over which it passes and is attached to the lower jaw on each side. Thus, with this exquisite instrument—a veritable bone hypodermic bulb syringe—there can be no failure, for the act of opening the mouth erects and connects the fangs with the poison sac, simultaneously compressing the glands.

Rattlesnake venom will not kill vegetable life: in fact.

Rattlesnake venom will not kill vegetable life; in fact

Rattlesnake venom will not kill vegetable life; in fact, some seeds may be grown in the venom, diluted in water. A pigeon was given enough per mouth to kill fifty if injected beneath the skin, with no perceptible ill effect. Prince Charles Lucian Napoleon, brother of the French Emperor, has given us the only trustworthy analysis of crotalus horridus (rattlesnake) poison.

The Prince treated the venom to an excess of alcohol and filtered it, and the residue being well washed with fresh portions of alcohol, the latter was evaporated to dryness.

The coagulum was next washed, drop by drop, with cold water, so as to dissolve the riperine (venom,) which was separated from the solution by evaporation. This precipitate, after being repeatedly washed with alcohol, was allowed to dry.

On testing it toxicologically it was found to be actively poisonous, giving rise, even when employed in minute amount, to all the phenomena, local and general, minute amount, to all the phenomena, local and general, of rattlesnake poisoning.

The writer experimented not only with alcohol, but with turpentine, nitrate of silver, soda and potassium, and found that the mixture of these agents with rattlesnake venom did not alter or even delay toxic action, providing the re-agents were not of caustic strength. Two drops of venom was treated with twenty-five drops of alcohol and after ten minutes the liquid was injected into the breast tissues of a pigeon, which died in thirty-seven minutes.

A check experiment by injecting the alcohol (twenty-seven minutes.

A check experiment by injecting the alcohol (twenty-five drops) resulted in slight stupefaction, quick recovery.

One-third of a drop of venom was treated with a drahm of alcohol and evaporated to seven drops and was then injected under the skin of a pigeon. It died in twelve minutes. One-half a drop of venom was mixed with a teaspoonful of alcohol and kept for four weeks. The alcohol evaporated, the precipitate collected, redissolved and thrown beneath the skin of a pigeon; it died in nine hours. Experiment repeated, bird died in two flours. I dissolved crystals of venom, three years old: in 98 deg. alcohol, and injected it beneath the skin of the breast of small dogs, cats, etc. Death followed surely and swiftly.

One-third of a drop of venom was mixed with aqua fortis and in twelve minutes the acid was neutralized with liquid potassae. The mixture was injected into the thigh of a small poodle dog, which died in four hours. Is one not reasonably justified in concluding that if the venom is not affected by these agents in the test tube, they are not likely to modify its action within the system?

How, then, does it kill?

Inject two drops of venom beneath the skin of a pigeon; of a sudden, and without a pang it is dead, with no change visible—no pain. It may require days for the same quantity to kill another.

Try a larger animal. A large Newfoundland dog is injected with five drops. He lives over the first few hours of feebleness and seems recovering, but now some horrid malady is seizing hold, and he real zes that his hour is come.

A large and rapidly-growing tumor marks the spot where the injecting needle entered. Strange enough there is no inflammation at first; the whole mass is fluid blood, which, presently soaks every tissue near, even discoloring the bones. Everybody knows that if one or more small blood vessels are opened they bleed, but, that sooner or later Nature stops them with a blood clot. Now, keeping this in view the conclusion seems simple—that this dread venom destroys the power of the blood to clot and devrives the victim of his only remedy that this dread vehom destroys the power of the blood to clot and deprives the victim of his only remedy against hemorrhage, as illustrated in the case of the dogrand tumor above mentioned. Every moment the dog's strong legs are becoming less able to support his weight and every tissue begins to bleed, followed by various symptoms accordingly as each organ becomes involved—death following from exhaustion—painless.

The climar—a reconituation as it were of all the ex-

The climax—a recapitulation as it were, cf all the experiments now follows:

A rabbit was chloroformed into insensibility, its abdomen opened and a piece of delicate membrane which connects and supports the intestines was laid bare beneath a microscope of very high power. A single drop of verom was placed upon this membrane under observation.

For thirty seconds there was no perceptible change. Suddenly a minute blood vessel gave way, when R vas immediately covered up by a rush of blood discs in Nature's effort to repair the break.

A little way off another vessel broke, followed by another wild rush and scurrying about of blood discs, and then a third and fourth, until within four minutes the entire microscopic field was covered with blood, then followed immediately the rupture of the membrane. Here is the very beginning of the end as certainly and plainly as the eye can discern.

This horrid venom has the subtle power to forbid the blood to clot and so to soften or weaken the tissues that they break under the force of the heart's

John Brainard, surveyor, Redlands, Cal., aged 26, was stung on the bare calf of his leg by both fangs. Almost immediately there was exhibited the paleness of body and coldness of surface of approaching dissolution, followed by much vomiting, extreme retching and alarming exhaustion. Here was a man strong as an ox, prostrated in mind and helpless in body as an infant, and all within a few minutes, through two punctures scarcely discernible to the naked eye. The leg was ligated and from fitteen to thirty grains (about one-half teaspoonful) of carbonate of ammonia administered every half hour, and the powder forced continually into the wounds after the punctures had been split across to the bottom.

Instead of removing the ligature all at once as is customary by most medical men, it should be loosened by degrees as the venom is neutralized, thus, by installments, as it were. He recovered.

An Italian vineyardist, after having been bitten twice on the forearm, leaving four punctures, and been given a quart of whisky by his friends, made a rapid recovery under the above treatment.

The fact that one bitten may withstand an amount of and helpless in body as an infant, and all within a few under the above treatment.

The fact that one bitten may withstand an amount of whisky (it frequently kills) is frequently used as evidence that the excess of alcohol is expended in neutralizing the venom, but the question is, would not the resistance of the system, caused by the fear of death and the venom, cause it to withstand similarly the effect of any drug?

But can we save life in these access with any can be a second to the same of the system.

But can we save life in these cases with carbonate of ammonia? The answer of numerous trials by the writer and others on man and the lower animals is, "yes."

Ten to twenty drops of venom may be pressed from the glands of a full-grown rattlesnake daily.

only the largest rattle can cast enough venom to kill a man, and not even then with certainty, unless provoked to fury before striking. Statistics prove that only one in twenty bitten die, thus you see, as whisky is given in all cases, king alcohol gets the credit if they recover and is charged with no failures.

A rattick's food is froze young rabbits squirrels birds and is charged with no failures.

A ratt'er's food is frogs, young rabbits, squirrels, birds, eggs, nestlings, etc. When surprised, his attitude is one of the finest examples of discretion, defiant courage and confidence, saying plainly, "I know you will retreat when you learn who I am," and when convinced that he is liable to get worsted, he slowly glides away like an unconquered enemy, sure of his strength, but willing to call it a draw.

UNIQUE OBSERVANCE OF MEMORIAL DAY.

[Harper's Bazar:] Five little villages in Southern New Jersey unite annually in a unique observance of Memorial day. They are all near enough to the sea to be dominated by the thought of it. So it is not strange that when they come to think of the men who have died for their country their minds turn to the vast grave at their very doors. There are only 500 inhabitants, all told, in these villages, but the idea of decorating the told, in these villages, but the idea of decorating the great sea grave does not appall them. When Memorial day comes around, the children of the neighborhood, carrying flags and garlands and crowned with flowers, go to a pier which runs out into the ocean, where, after marching up and down and singing patriotic songs, they throw their flowers and garlands into the waves, while a bugle sounds and a salute is fired. This ceremony of decorating the common grave of those who have been lost at sea not only can be made a beautiful and impressive one, but has also the significance which would appeal to people. appeal to people.

We are by no means the only patriotic citizens of this hemisphere. The South Americans go wild over national holidays. They have processions and parades, and the cities are alive with the noise of fire-crackers and cannon. Every house is decorated with flags and bunting. There are more flags displayed in Chile, the Argentine and Brazil than in the United States. One of the funny things about a South American city is the flag poles. They jut out from every house and every story. No one would think of putting up a business block without flagpoles. In the main streets the flag poles from the buildings opposite each other almost meet, and when the streets are narrow, as in the case of the Ouvidor, the main thoroughfare of Rio de Janeiro, the flags form a canopy or arbor over the people below.

Many of the cities arch their principal streets with iron gas pipes, upon which are globes of different colors. On independence night these globes are ablaze with lights and the national colors show out everywhere. The decoration of Montevideo, Rosario and Rio de Janeiro is remarkable as to its gas lights. over national holidays. They have processions and Venezuela's Fifth of July.

Independence day in Venezuela is on the 5th of July.

I speak of it first, for Venezuela was the birthplace of South American independence. It was in Caracas that Simon Bolivar, the chief of the George Washingtons of South America, was born. He came of a good family, and was sent to Europe to be educated. He went to school in Madrid, and after a tour of France returned there to be married. He was then 19, and his bride was 16. He brought her with him to America, but had hardly arrived in Venezuela before she died of yellow fever. Upon her coffin Bolivar took an oath that he weuld not marry again. He consecrated his life to American independence, and from then on devoted him-American independence, and from then on devoted him-self to the raising of revolutions to free the country from Spain. The declaration of independence was made on July 5, 1811, and that declaration was the death knell of Spanish authority all over South America. After many ups and downs, Bolivar finally triumphed, and made Venezuela free. He then crossed the mountains to New Granada, or Colombia, and was instrumental in freeing that country, and also Ecuador, Bolivia and Peru.

You will find statues of him in nearly all the great cities of South America, and streets are named after him in every country.

cities of South America, and streets are named after him in every country.

The Spanish oppressed their subjects far more than the British ever oppressed us. They held South America in Servitude for 300 years. They would not allow the people to be educated. One of the Spanish kings, upon receiving a petition for the establishment of a school in one of the towns, said: "I do not consider learning proper in America." The South Americans were not allowed to read certain histories of the United States, and the sale of books of any kind without the sanction of the Council of the West Indies was prohibited. All of the officials during the Spanish régime were appointed from Spain. Out of the 160 viceroys there were only four who were not Spanish, and of 600 captains-general only fourteen were born in America.

The Same as in Ouba.

The Same as in Cuba.

The cruelties of the Spanish were beyond conception. The Argentines, after they had announced their dec-laration of independence, issued a manifesto describing them. This was on the 25th of October, 1817. The manifesto was addressed to the nations of the earth, manifesto was addressed to the nations of the earth, and it is a terrible arraignment of Spain. It is too long to quote here, but I can give a few of its items: It charges the Spaniards with wiping out the native populations. It says that entire towns have disappeared, and their inhabitants destroyed by compulsive labor. It states that Spain has systematically tried to degrade her people in America; that she has done all she could to kill off the surplus and to keep the population down. "Men have been indiscriminately killed in order to diminish the number." In some of the countries non-combatants were taken in groups into the squares and shot. One instance is mentioned where the Spanish soldiers cut off the ears of the inhabitants of one of the towns and sent a basket of them as a present to their general. After this the troops burned the town, first shutting up people in their houses in order that they might be burned to death. They charged the Spaniards with whipping old religious persons in the open squares, and also whipping women whom they had first stripped and bound to cannon, thus exposing them to shame and derision.

After a number of more charges of this kind, including the brutal killing of old men, women and children, detailing the poisoning of the water and food, the blowing-up of the soldiers' quarters, the Argentines declared their independence. They soon succeeded in establishing it, and they then crossed the mountains to give freedom to Chile.

The man who led this revolution was Gen. San Martin. He had the place in lower South America that Bolivar had in the north, and he was an equally noble character. Born in the Argentine, he was educated in Europe. He served there in the Spanish army, and at the age of 20 was fighting Moors in Africa. After he returned to South America he became the commander of the army, and was in charge of it on that march over the Andes to Chile. This expedition was a greater one than that of Napoleon over the Alps into Italy. It was successful, although it lasted for some time, and included a number of battles. Having freed Chile, San Martin went north and aided in the freedom of Peru, himself and Bolivar meeting in 1822 at Guayaquil.

Two South American Heroes.

Two South American Heroes.

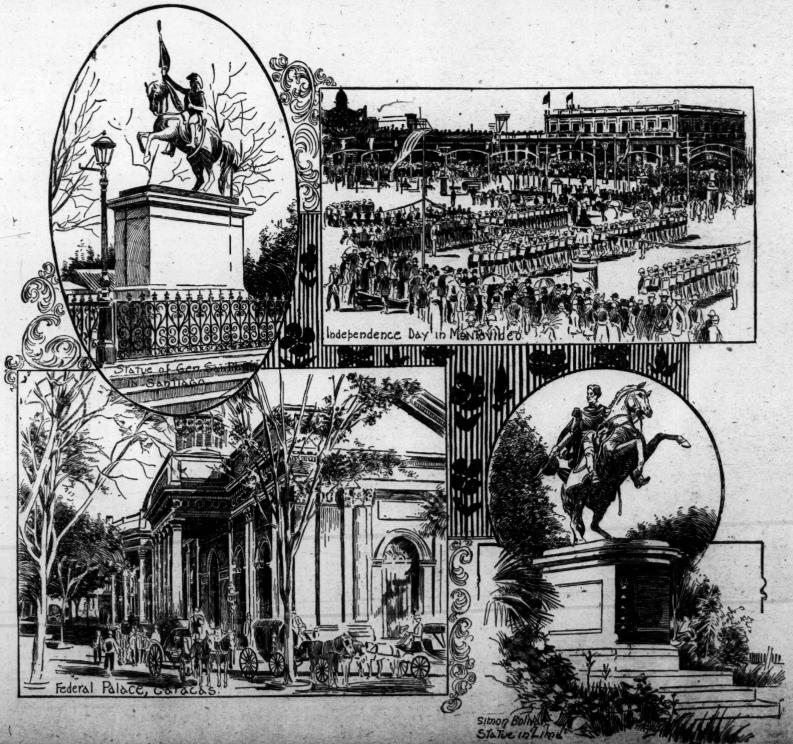

There is no doubt as to the honesty of these two men. Either could have been rich beyond the dreams of avarice, but each died poor. Chile offered to make San Martin a present of 10,000 ounces of gold, or about $200,000, but he refused it. After the struggle was over he left the Argentine for Europe, having with him only $3000. He died there after years of poverty and neglect.

It was through Bolivar that Bolivia became an independent nation. The new country was called Bolivia after Bolivar, and its Assembly voted him $1,000,000. Bolivar accepted the gift only on the condition that the money should be used for the emancipation of the slaves of Bolivia. The Congress of Lima elected him perpetual Dictator, and he was later on made President of Colombia. He served several terms, and then resigned from public life.

Notwithstanding his resignation, he was reëlected, but the opposition party, which controlled Congress, voted to accept his resignation and to give him a pension of $3000 a year, on condition that he would live abroad. He started for Caracas, with the intention of going to England, but died before he left Venezuela. He was much hurt by this Congressional action, and the slight is said to have hastened his death. His last words were: "My wishes are for the happiness of the people. If my death should unite them, I will go to the tomb content—yes, to the tomb! The people rend me there, but I forgive them."

Queer Fentures of South American Politics.

I am often asked as to the honesty of South American politics, and whether it is true that the republics are republics only in name. The questions are hard to

few

The families of the rich control the republic of Peru The common people have no rights that the politicians are bound to respect, and there is undoubtedly much stealing in high places. In Chile about two hundred families manage the politics and government. They practically own the country, they control the elections, and put up and down whom they please. There are, it is true, two parties, but the leaders belong to these families, and the members of the families get the fat offices.

It is not far different in the Argentine republic. The ordinary citizen knows that it would be foolish to go to the polls. Buenos Ayres is a city of 800,000 people. During my stay there there was an election, and only 20,000 votes were cast. There should have been something like 200,000. The men who own the lands usually vote their employés as they please, and managers of the elections decide how many votes each candidate is to have before the votes are put into the ballot-boyes.

It is the same in Uruguay and Paraguay, and not very much different in Brazil.

The President of Brazil

During my stay in Rio I met the new President of Brazil. His name is Campo Salles, and he is a man of much more than ordinary ability. He came into prominence some years ago at the time they were talking of the emancipation of the slaves. A gradual liberation had been planned, but Campo Salles got up in the convention and said that he thought the slaves should be freed there and then, and as for him, he proposed to liberate his at once. The speech created a sensation, and resulted soon after in the emancipation of the slaves. President Campo Salles is, I judge, about 50 years of age. He is a bright-eyed, dark-faced mar of medium height and good appearance. He is well educated, has traveled widely, and is a man of practical business judgment and ideas. I am told he is making a good President.

Among the excitements of the average South Ameri-

Among the excitements of the average South Ameriamong the excitements of the average South American Fourth of July are the revolutions. The people often choose the anniversary of their independence as the day for changing rulers, and the opposition party captures the army and marches with it to the Executive Mansion and demands a change in government. There is often firing, and now and then a President is filled. It was only a couple of very core for the President is

There is often firing, and now and then a President is killed. It was only a couple of years ago that President Borda of Uruguay was shot by an assassin when he was coming out of the cathedral after such a celeration. There was an attemate to assassinate the former President, Monaes of Brazil, and Alfaro, the President of Ecuador, has been assaulted several times by those who hoped to kill him.

The man who is now President of Peru got there through revolution, and the President of Uruguay holds to his position largely through the Galling guns on his roof. The night before a great holiday is always an unrestful one to a South American President. He knows that when day breaks the streets will be filled with exthat when day breaks the streets will be filled with ex-citable people, and he does not know what the conspira-tors of the opposing party have planned for the occa-

What They Think of Us.

Since my return from South American regard the people of the United States. My answer is that they both admire and fear us. The war with Spain was a great eye-opener to them. They rather thought that the Spaniards were stronger than we. After the battle at Manila they changed their expressions of contempt to the words: "Los Yankees son diablos!" which, being translated, means, "The Yankees are devils."

They fear us, for they imagine that, sooner or later, we expect to take the whole of South America and make it subject to our country. You may tell them that we would not have the continent as a gift. They will smile at the statement and say, "Si, señor!" but in their hearts they believe you are lying. This is so of every country of South America, from little Paraguay to Brazil. It is especially so of the Chileans, and very much so with the Argentines.

On the other hand, the South Americans admire our government. They have modeled their constitutions after ours, and nearly all the politicians have large libraries of Americana. They know our leading men, and will talk to you of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson. There is a statue of George Washington in Caracas, put up as one of the heroes of human liberty. In the White House of the Argentine I found a library which contained several thousand books relating to the United States. I saw hundreds of books relating to the United States. I saw hundreds of books relating to our country and government in the library of the Secretary of State of Paraguay, and also a fine collection of Americana in the large library of Señor Rodrigues, the able editor of the Comercio, the leading paper of Brazil. The Fourth of July is usually celebrated by our Consults and diplomats abroad by receptions and dinners. Last year the Consul at Paraguay, a colored statesman from Tennessee, John L. Ruffin, was serenaded by the government band. He held a reception at the Consulate, and the leading Paraguayan officials paid their respects to Uncle Sam. Col. Bryan, th

United States Colonius in South America.

There is one class of our people in South America who hardly know whether to celebrate the Fourth or not. They would like to, but they do not think it consistent with their conduct in fleeing from the arms of Uncle Sam at the close of the civil war. I refer to the several colonies who left the United States for South America because the North was victorious over the South. There are two such colonies in Brazil, one about for hundred miles or more up the Amazon, near San-

America because the North was victorious over the South. There are two such colonies in Brazil, one about five hundred miles or more up the Amazon, near Santarem, and another at the city of Campinas, in the coffee-raising State of Sao Paulo.

The Campinas colony was very large away back in the sixties, but it has now dwindled down to about a hundred families. It is made up of Southerners, who selected Brazil as a home before slavery was abolished in the United States. They were very sore over the destat of the South. They had been slaveholders, and when they came south they supposed, I venture, that Brazil would always have slaves.
The first who came were from Alabams, Georgia and Mississippi, but later and other States. They bought land, and some of them for a time had alaves, and several had these slaves freed by the emancipation laws of Brazil. In fact, a number than had been slaves freed by the emancipation laws of Brazil. In fact, a number

time in South America.

I met a number of these Southerners during my stay in South America, but I have yet to talk with one who is not anxious to get back to the United States. Only a few are doing well. The most of them are in just about the same condition that they would have been had they stayed at home. They all say they expect to go back some day, but the probability is they never will. They have English schools, and although they are so few, they stick to their church denominations and have little heavens of their own. In the colony at Campinas there are Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist churches, each of which, I venture, has its special variety of hell—in expectation.

Expense of South American Travel.

Expense of South American Travet.

With this letter I close the regular series describing my South American tour. From Manaos, 1000 miles up the Amazon, I returned to Para, where I got a cargo steamer for New York. The distance from Para to New York is over three thousand miles. The time required is twelve days, and the fare was $90.

My whole South American tour, from New York to New York, including the interior trips which I made, covered a little over twenty-five thousand miles. The expenses were at times very heavy, and at times comparatively light, averaging for the tour between $9 and $10 gold a day.

As a whole the traveling is not unpleasant. The ships a whole the traveling is not unpleasant. The ships of the west coast are very comfortable, and those of the South Atlantic as far as Rio are not bad. The hotels in the large cities are fair, and much cheaper than in the United States.

222-2-2-1 RATTLER'S VENOM. INTERESTING EXPERIMENTS AS TO ITS NATURE AND ANTIDOTES. By a Special Contributor.

HE old story that serpents "charm" is obsolete though not extinct. This is not surprising when one observes parent birds fluttering near, in defense of their nests, as the marauding snake approaches. For the same lack of opportunity for close observation by those competent to judge correctly, whisky is the chief, if not the sole remedy relied upon by physicians as an antidote for serpent venom, yet there is no proof that it is efficacious or even beneficial.

Stripped entirely of popular descriptive ornamentation and told in the plainest language, the scientific story of the rattlesnake and its venom is one of horrid fascina-

The inquiring mind would know why and how this serpent can kill with such celerity and certainty that nearly the entire animal kingdom shuns it as death it

All that is known leads to the belief, generally, that the venom of all serpents is alike in toxic character—differing only in degree of virulence.

The venom of all is albuminous, and, certainly, the most delicate chemical tests show no difference between the white of an egg and serpent venom; yet how different—the one an embryo of life, the other a shadow of

The venom is manufactured in almond-shaped glands behind the eyes and consists, chiefly, of miscroscopic tules, which carry the venom to larger tubes at the lower side of the gland from which a small duct runs lower side of the gland from which a small duct runs forward under the eye and thence around the upper jaw in front, where, by a peculiar enlargement of muscles, the venom is corked up until a greater force overcomes the fibrous resistance. The saber-shaped fangs are located well forward in the upper jaw. The act of opening the mouth raises the fangs from the grooves in which they lie and throws the points well forward, bringing the venom duct in direct connection with the poison gland behind the eye. Two muscles are attached to the upper jaw on each side, above the poison gland, over which it passes and is attached to the lower jaw on each side. Thus, with this exquisite instrument—a veritable side. Thus, with this exquisite instrument—a veritable bone hypodermic bulb syringe—there can be no failure, for the act of opening the mouth erects and connects the fangs with the poison sac, simultaneously compressing

Rattlesnake venom will not kill vegetable life; in fact some seeds may be grown in the venom, diluted in water A pigeon was given enough per mouth to kill fifty if injected beneath the skin, with no perceptible ill effect. Prince Charles Lucian Napoleon, brother of the French Emperor, has given us the only trustworthy analysis of crotalus horridus (rattlesnake) polson.

The Prince treated the venom to an excess, of alcohol and filtered it, and the residue being well washed with fresh portions of alcohol, the latter was evaporated to dryness.

The coagulum was next washed, drop by drop, with cold water, so as to dissolve the riperine (venom,) which was separated from the solution by evaporation. This precipitate, after being repeatedly washed with alcohol, was allowed to dry.

On testing it toxicologically it was found to be actively poisonous, giving rise, even when employed in minute amount, to all the phenomena, local and general, of rattlesnake poisoning.

of rattlesnake poisoning.

The writer experimented not only with alcohol, but with turpentine, nitrate of silver, soda and potassium, and found that the mixture of these agents with rattlesnake venom did not alter or even delay toxic action, providing the re-agents were not of caustic strength. Two drops of venom was treated with twenty-five drops of alcohol and after ten minutes the liquid was injected into the breast tissues of a pigeon, which died in thirtyeven minutes.

A check experiment by injecting the alcohol (twenty-five drops) resulted in slight stupefaction, quick recovery. One-third of a drop of venom was treated with a drahm of alcohol and evaporated to seven drops and was then injected under the skin of a pigeon. It died in twelve minutes. One-half a drop of venom was mixed with a teaspoonful of alcohol and kept for four weeks. The alcohol evaporated, the precipitate collected, redissolved and thrown beneath the skin of a pigeon; it died in aine hours. Experiment repeated, bird died in on the breast of small dogs, cats, etc. Death followed surely and swiftly.

One-third of a drop of venom was mixed with aqua fortis and in twelve minutes the acid was neutralized with liquid potassae. The mixture was injected into the thigh of a small poodle dog, which died in four hours.

Is one not reasonably justified in concluding that if the venom is not affected by these agents in the test the venom is not affected by these agents in the test tube, they are not likely to modify its action within the

How, then, does it kill?

Inject two drops of venom beneath the skin of a pigeon; of a sudden, and without a pang it is dead, with no change visible—no pain. It may require days for the same quantity to kill another.

Try a larger animal. A large Newfoundland dog is injected with five drops. He lives over the first few hours of feebleness and seems recovering, but now some horrid malady is seizing hold, and he realizes that his hour is

A large and rapidly-growing tumor marks the spot where the injecting needle entered. Strange enough there is no inflammation at first; the whole mass is fluid there is no inflammation at first; the whole mass is fluid blood, which, presently soaks every tissue near, even discoloring the bones. Everybody knows that if one or more small blood vessels are opened they bleed, but, that sooner or later Nature stops them with a blood clot. Now, keeping this in view the conclusion seems simple—that this dread venom destroys the power of the blood to clot and deprives the victim of his only remedy against hemorrhage, as illustrated in the case of the dog and tumor above mentioned. Every moment the dog's strong legs are becoming less able to support his weight and every tissue begins to bleed, followed by various symptoms accordingly as each organ becomes involved death following from exhaustion—painless.

The climax—a recapitulation as it were, cf all the experiments now follows:

A rabbit was chloroformed into insensibility, its ab-

A rabbit was chloroformed into insensibility, its ab-domen opened and a piece of delicate membrane which connects and supports the intestines was laid bare be-neath a microscope of very high power. A single drop of venom was placed upon this membrane under observa-tion.

For thirty seconds there was no perceptible change. Suddenly a minute blood vessel gave way, when it was immediately covered up by a rush of blood discs in Nature's effort to repair the break.

A little way off another vessel broke, followed by another wild rush and scurrying about of blood discs, and then a third and fourth, until within four minutes the entire microscopic field was covered with blood, then followed immediately the rupture of the membrane. Here is the very beginning of the end as certainly and plainly as the eye can discern.

This horrid venom has the subtle power to forbid the blood to clot and so to soften or weaken the tissues that they break under the force of the heart's certion.

John Brainard, surveyor, Redlands, Cal., aged 26, was stung on the bare calf of his leg by both fangs.

Almost immediately there was exhibited the paleness of body and coldness of surface of approaching dissolution followed by much positions extreme retaining and tion, followed by much vomiting, extreme retching and tion, followed by much vomiting, extreme retching and alarming exhaustion.

Here was a man strong as an ox, prostrated in mind and helpless in body as an infant, and all within a few minutes, through two punctures scarcely discernible to the naked eye. The leg was ligated and from fifteen to thirty grains (about one-half teaspoonful) of carbonate of ammonia administered every half hour, and the powder forced continually into the wounds after the punctures had been split across to the bottom.

Instead of removing the ligature all at once as is customary by most medical men, it should be loosened by degrees as the venom is neutralized, thus, by install-degrees as the venom is neutralized, thus, by installments, as it were. He recovered.

An Italian vineyardist, after having been bitten twice on the forearm, leaving four punctures, and been given a quart of whisky by his friends, made a rapid recovery under the above treatment.

The fact that one bitten may withstand an amount of whisky (it frequently kills) is frequently used as evidence that the excess of alcohol is expended in neutralizing the venom, but the question is, would not the resistance of the system, caused by the fear of death and the venom, cause it to withstand similarly the effect of any drug?

But can we save life in these cases with carbonate of ammonia? The answer of numerous trials by the writer and others on man and the lower animals is, "yes."

Ten to twenty drops of venom may be pressed from the glands of a full-grown rattlesnake daily.

Only the largest rattler can cast enough venom to kill only the largest ratter the cast enough venom to kin a man, and not even then with certainty, unless provoked to fury before striking. Statistics prove that only one in twenty bitten die, thus you see, as whisky is given in all cases, king alcohol gets the credit if they recover and is charged with no failures.

A ratt'er's food is frogs, young rabbits, squirrels, birds, eggs, nestlings, etc. When surprised, his attitude is one of the finest examples of discretion, defiant courage and confidence, saying plainly, "I know you will retreat when you learn who I am," and when convinced that he is liable to get worsted, he slowly glides away like an unconquered enemy, sure of his strength, but willing to call it a draw.

UNIQUE OBSERVANCE OF MEMORIAL DAY.

[Harper's Bazar:] Five little villages in Southern New Jersey unite annually in a unique observance of Memorial day. They are all near enough to the sea to be dominated by the thought of it. So it is not strange that when they come to think of the men who have died for their country their minds turn to the vast grave at their very doors. There are only 500 inhabitants, all told, in these villages, but the idea of decorating the great sea grave does not appall them. When Memorial told, in these villages, but the idea of decorating the great sea grave does not appall them. When Memorial day comes around, the children of the neighborhood, carrying flags and garlands and crowned with flowers, go to a pier which runs out into the ocean, where, after marching up and down and singing patriotic songs, they throw their flowers and garlands into the waves, while a bugle sounds and a salute is fired. This ceremony of decorating the common grave of those who have been less that see not only can be made a beautiful and imlost at sea not only can be made a beautiful and impressive one, but has also the significance which would appeal to people.

The action of the University of New York in confer-ring on ex-Secretary William R. Day the degree of Doc-tor of Laws recalls the fact that Mr. Day has received three honorary degrees since by was at the head of the State Department.

ONDON theaters are different in many from New York theaters," said a woman who has just got back home. "In the first place, like the railways, many of them are built underground. A big flunkey dressed in the style of George IV or a punctilious personage in a swallowtail points you out the stalls and you go down one flight of stairs. A maid in a white cap and apron directs you down another, at the landing of which another maid in white cap and apron directs you further down still, until you stand at a side entrance and the flare of the stage bursts upon you.

"Standing there at the side entrance, a moment before the maid comes to seat you, the appearance of the stalls strikes you as imposing. Everybody is in full dress. There are some very beautiful shoulders, but, alas! there are also some that are not beautiful; but alas! there are also some that are not beautiful; but beautiful or not, they are all bare.

"In my opinion, the pit spoils the effect of the stalls. Our way of making the gallery seats the cheapest is decidedly the best. The juxtaposition of exquisite toilets, elaborate coiffures and bare shoulders with the common everyday clothes of the poorer class is too violent. Imagine carpeted floots, white-aproned attendants, perfumes and flowers divided from you by a broad wall four feet high, above which—it reaches just to the eyes—seated in a hardwood chair, with your feet on a bare floor, you gaze in a melancholy way over into the promised land. Some tourists buy seats for the pit—the difference in the price is considerable, 2 shillings and sixpence for the pit, 10 shillings and sixpence for the pit, 10 shillings and sixpence for the pit me forever.

"The pit appauds strange and unexpected sentiments."

at home forever.

"The pit appauds strange and unexpected sentiments. In fact, you are never quite certain what it will applaud; neither, I imagine, are the actors. For instance, a large and unwieldy actress says in a loud voice, 'Some people buy their gowns in Paris, but London is good enough for me!' whereat the pit comes down in a stupendous thunder of applause interspersed with cries of 'Bravo' bravo! bravo!' An actress who has been a magnificent success a decade or so before with cries of 'Bravo! bravo! bravo!' An actress who has been a magnificent success a decade or so before appears upon the stage. She stands in the glare of the footlights, a wreck of her former self, and before her cracked voice can break upon the enraptured still-ness the pit goes into convulsions, stands and shouts, 'Bravo! bravo! bravo!'

"Some peculiar customs prevail in the stalls. One evening I saw three young men go out between the acts. They went out in a perfectly natural way, but it was their coming back that surprised me. They entered at about three rows in the rear of their original seats, and deliberately climbed over the intervening backs of the chairs. I stared wide-eyed at the spectacle of those three young men, all in evening dress, with shining patent-leathers and expansive shirt fronts, climbing the backs of chairs backs of chairs.

"The prevailing afternoon tea prevails also at the matinees. Between the third and fourth acts, or after the first piece, while the scenery is being shoved about for the one-act farce, the maids serve tea at sixpence. It gives a home-like air to a tehater ot see these neat and they trays, waiting on the women, who gather in groups and chatter as they drink their tea for all the world as if they were at home in their own drawing-rooms.

"Every possible effort is made for the comfort of the London theater-goer; otherwise he complains. He must have his money's worth or the manager suffers. In many cases the manager is deserving of sympathy. At a matinée at Her Majesty's theater there was some knocking on the outside wall. It did not annoy me, in fact, I hardly noticed it until some one near by complained. 'I'll go and see the manager about it,' said he He got up and walked out with a determined. complained. T'll go and see the manager about it,' said he. He got up and walked out with a determined stride. Several others in different parts of the theater got up and walked out. The manager was besieged. The knocking continued. Finally Mr. Tree came before the footlights. He apologized profusely for the annoyance caused by the knocking, promising to do all in his power to have it stopped. He had it stopped—I wondered how much he paid those carpenters to stop their work for a couple of hours—and the play went serenely on.

"In one important particular the London manager representation of the supplies their cases of sudden and extreme thirst, he supplies their needs at close range. In a London theater you not only find cloakrooms, umbrella repositories, billiard-rooms and rooms where tea is brewed and thin slices of bread and butter are served upon a moment's notice, but you find fullserved upon a moment's notice, but you find full-fledged barrooms, glittering with cut-glass and long-necked bottles, filled to the brim with the ubiquitous Scotch whisky, together with its insaparable companion, the inevitable sizzing soda water."

The number of inquiries received with reference to the dramatization of "Ben Hur," says the Chicago Times-Herald, demonstrates the almost universal in-terest excited by that really great work. Published terest excited by that really great work. Published ten years ago, this remarkable novel, based upon the life of Christ, created such a deep and enduring impression that the project of arranging the story for stage use has occasioned no little apprehension. Many are inclined to fear that some form of sacrilege will result, but since the work is being done under the supervision of Gen. Wallace, this impression seems quite without foundation. It is understood that he has without foundation. It is understood that he has hitherto refused a proposal for making dramatic use of his novel, and we may assume that his tardy con-sent was received by means of stipulations which will sent was received by means of stipulations which will guard against any possible offense. Of course, Christ will not be represented in the play, nor will the crucifixion be touched upon in any illustrative manner, the intention being to make the most of those dramatic features, including the charlot race, that can be staged without doing violence to any religious opinion. It is said that the dramatist, Mr. Young, has finished two acts of the play to the satisfaction of all concerned, and it is to be hoped that a success will be achieved in harmony with the dignity and significance of the story. Writing of "Ben Hur" in a recent letter, Gen. Wallace explains how the idea of that work developed in his mind:

"I was just getting over the restlessness due to years of service in the civil war when it occurred to me to write the impressions of the wise men I had carried in my mind since boyhood. Those three men, guided by a moving, almost talking star, never left my memory. I thought a serial on the subject would admit of many illustrations, and would, perhaps, be acceptable to a magazine, so I began to write it under an old beech tree in my dooryard, commencing with the meeting in the desert and ending with the birth near Bethlehem. I was not influenced by religion or sentiment at the time.

"The writing of the novel in connection with the tale lehem. I was not influenced by religion or sentiment at the time.

"The writing of the novel in connection with the tale of the Christ was an afterthought. The idea came to me a year after the serial was completed, and after I had become interested in some theological discussions involving some elementary ideas, such as God, heaven, the hereafter, Christ and His divinity. I took the manuscript with me to New Mexico and finished it there. I had never visited the Holy Land, and I would not have trusted to the treachery of a tourist's memory oven if I had gone, so I wrote the book with an official chart of Palestine before me, showing the villages and all the sacred places, the heights, depressions, passes, trails and distances. Maybe I got some inspiration from New Mexico, for the topography, scenery and general environment are all characteristic of Palestine.

"I chose the name 'Ben Hur' because it was biblical and simple. He was a composite character, showing the Roman influence then making encroachments on the Jews. Esther I named after my own mother, and Simonides I evolved from my knowledge of the characteristics of the Jewish people. Rome having furnished the political complexion of the story; the evolution of Messala was natural."

John C. Fisher, manager for Mme. Modjeska, John C. Fisher, manager for Mme. Modjeska, announces that the elaborate productions which he had in view for next season are now well under way. Thomas Moses, the scenic artist, with two assistant artists, is now at work at Mr. Fisher's theater in San Diego, where the productions are being built. The scenic outfit for "Macbeth," "Mary Stuart" and "Much Ado About Nothing," will be new and complete in every way.

The feature of Modjeska's repertoire next season and The feature of Modjeska's repertoire next season and for which preparations are being made, will be her new play of "Marie Antoinette." In this direction, Mr. Mozes has been given carte-blanche, and if all accounts prove true it will almost compare, from a production standpoint, at least, with Henry Irving's much-talked of success, "Robespierre." The two plays, by the way, will have many points of resemblance, for Modjeska's play of "Marie Antoinette" of course belongs to the same period as "Robespierre," and naturally concerns many of the same exciting events incident to the fail of the French monarchy. Clinton Stuart, the author, is said to have made all the dramatic material-possible out of the characters of Miraheau, Marat, Robespierre, and King Louis, and in the character of Marie Antoinette, the noblest victim of the bloody revolution, he is said to have furnished Modjeska with one of the best opportunities of her career.

Kellerd, who is to be featured as Modjeska's leading support next season, is now in Europe, for pleasure and study, and while abroad he is to get the designs for his many costumes. It is not yet known which character he will elect to play in "Marle Antoniette," but in other plays of the repertoire he will be seen as Macbeth, as Leicester in "Mary Stuart," as Benedict in "Much Ado About Nothing" and as Mark Antony in "Antony and Cleopatra." Charles D. Herman, who earned so much favorable comment with Modjeska last season, will continue as a member of the company, as also will George Spencer, Wadsworth Harris and Lynn Pratt. The tour will embrace all the principal cities, including San Francisco, Chicago, and a long engagement in New York.

Stapleton, and is a farce in the French acceptation of the term. It was originally produced at Hoyt's Theater, New York, and has since been seen in all the large cities of the North and West, with gratifying results. To tell the story would take half the interest away; it suffices, therefore, that the plot concerns the experience of a man who secretly marries an actress, and tries to introduce her into his home without betraying the fact of his marriage to his family. Messrs. Warde and Sackett have always been identified with the foremost attractions of the country, and are establishing an enviable reputation with their new venture. Mr. Warde is the eldest son of Frederick Warde, and was his manager for years.

There will be an extra Fourth of July matinée at the Orpheum Tuesday afternoon, in addition to the regular performances through the week. The new bill that goes on Monday evening includes four features, the Phoites troupe of pantomimists head-

The Phoites include a number of the best performers from the "spectacle shows," and have but just returned from a European town.

Weekly Review.

-NDER the caption, "How Strauss Composed," is the following bit of interesting data in the current number of Musical America:

The wonderful dance music that gave Johann Strauss the title of 'Waltz King' was written in an erratic and impulsive way that is strangely in contrast to the pulseimpulsive way that is strangely in contrast to the pulse-like rhythm and continuity of the 'Blue Danube Waltzes.' Muscial impressions, themes, combinations in harmony, came into the musician's head at the most unexpected time and places. And Johann never let them escape. No matter where he was or what he was doing, the inspiration of the moment was obeyed and the melody was written down almost as soon as conceived by the brain, on whatever material was at hand. "This happened oftenest to be the composer's cuffs; and when they were covered, his shirt bosom. Often and often after his linen had gone into the wash, Mme. Strauss would be startled by a frantic appeal for a shirt or a pair of cuffs that held some musical fragment jotted down in a moment of inspiration, and now lost to the despairing composer who had forgotten to shirt or a pair of cuffs that held some musical fragment jotted down in a moment of inspiration, and now lost to the despairing composer who had forgotten to copy it. The most famous o fall the themes he wrote. The Blue Danube, was first jotted down on his cuff with a pencil, and might have shared the fate of other inspirations had it not been for the sympathetic care and devotion of his wife. Mrs. Strauss entered into her husband's erratic moods with infinite tact and care. Instead of being irritated at his uncertain and inconvenient methods of composing, she did everything te help him.

"He wrote on anything, books, papers, pictures, in whatever room he happened to be. His wife had pens and paper scattered all over the house so that wherever he went he should find them. She had a piano in every room that her husband used, and never let a bit of his linen go to the laundress unless it were perfectly clean, as far as musical scores were concerned. It is owing to her wise sympathy that many of the composer's best-loved dances are known today.

"In common with most great men, Strauss loved a garden, and often worked in his. Nothing seemed to stimulate his musical ideas like weeding or hoeing. He would often drop his hoe in the middle of a row of turnips or jump up from the absorbed weeding of a carrot patch, rush into the house, seize the first sheet of paper he saw and dash off a bar or two of melody to be afterward elaborated into a tone-poem.

"This impulsive quality is probably what gives the dance music of Strauss its vibrant, and living quality. It sweeps the dancers along like a river and appeals to no time, place or nation. He is universal and immor-emotions as old as human nature. Strauss belongs to no time, place or nation. He is universal and immor-tal, and while gir's and boys live they will dance to the music of the 'Beautiful Blue Danube.'"

In a recent issue of the Milwaukee Sentinel is the following bit of valuable information:

"An American national hymn, written half a century ago by a now dead German composer of music, has been unearthed in Chicago recently. Gustave Reichert is the author, also known as having produced a national hymn of the Germans. The song in question is said to be of great power and has never been sung anywhere. There has now been put forth an English transcript of the words, as appended below:

HYMN OF THE FLAG.

"Hail, Stars and Stripes, red, white and blue, We stand enraptured at thy view.
Lo, proud on high thy blue does stream, Thy starry wreaths on waters gleem. Fore'er to thee we will be truo. Hurrah! hurrah! red, white and blue! Hurrah! red, white and blue! Hurrah! red, white and blue! Hursh was the snow on mountain height, Thy white, truth's symbol, sheds its light. Thy laws knew master not, nor slave, and human rights thy emblem gave To all thy children—not the few. Hurrah! burrah! red, white and blue! Harnah! red, white and blue! Flame out thy red over land and sea, That beacon I ght of liberty, And must it be, our heart's blood red For thee and glory we will shed of the love that is thy due. Hurrah! hurrah! red, white and blue! Hurrah! red, white and blue! Hurrah! red, white and blue! Hurrah! red, white and blue!

There is a report that Adelini Patti is to return next season to this country and make a concert tour, which shall positively be her last, says Musical America. One shall positively be her last, says Musical America. One American impresario, who went abroad last summer, wanted to engage her for a tour here during the past winter, but the negotiations came to nothing. It is regarded as extremely uncertain whether Mme. Patti would be able to repeat the great successes she at one time made here in concert. But Mme. Patti, whatever the state of her voice may be, is one of the best-known persons in the world. Those who have never seen her would probably take advantage of the opportunity if she came, and her recent marriage would stimulate this part of the public's interest to hear her. Others would go to discover if she still sang as she did in the past.

In celebration of the Queen's eightieth birthday, says In celebration of the Queen's eightleth birthday, says a London letter to Musical America, a performance of "Lohengrin" was given in the Waterloo Chamber, at Windsor Castle, when Mmes. Nordica and Schuman-Heink, Messrs. Jean and Edouard de Reszke, David Bispham and Muhlmann all exerted themselves to their utmost to win the approbation of England's first lady. They had a most attentive and appreciative auditor in Her Majesty, who herself led the applause after each act.

After the performance, the artists were summoned to Her Majesty's presence, as is usual on such occasions; but the De Reszkes, who had never appeared in opera at Windsor before, had omitted to provide themselves with the swallow-tails, white cravat and other acceses of nineteenth-century evening dress, for, having ded that they could dress more comfortably at e, they had traveled from London in their royal knightly habiliments, shrouded from the vulgar by voluminous cloaks.

The Master of the Ceremonies was at his wits' end, but there was nothing for it. Her Majesty had summoned M. Jean and M. Edouard, and appear they must.

Preceded by the ladies, in their smartest attire, and Rishbam and Muhimann in the correctness of evening dress, the medieval knights approached the royal presence, where they were received, and each one individually thanked, with that gracious manner which has endeared the Queen to all who have had the privilege of contributing to her entertainment.

[Musical Age:] Emma Calvé is a profound believer palmistry, and that faith has probably had much to with her decision not to return to this country for do with her decision not to return to this country for the past season of opera at the Metropolitan. One of her intimate friends in Paris is a palmist, and so great is Mile. Calvé's belief in her powers that she practically controls the singer's affairs. Two years ago Mile. Calvé was under contract to sing at Covent Garden. Her friend told her that the lines in her hand prognosticated unmistakably her death if she went to London that year. So Mile. Calvé notified the management of the theater that she could not under any circumstances go that year to England. A short time afterward Mile. Calvé bought a house in a certain street in Paris, after making a long search for a quarter that was entirely satisfactory to her. The prophecy of her palms was death within a short time. Mile. Calvé immediately decided that she would never enter the house, and soon afterward it was sold.

W. S. B. Matthews, the well-known Chicago teacher and writer, tells an interesting story of the manner in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is dominated by its leader. He says: "I have heard many anecdotes of Gericke's way of doing business. For example: When the ensemble had reached what seemed very like perfection, the idea of playing in New York was broached, and Mr. Higginson (the Boston rich man and lover of music and his kind, who has financiered the Boston Orchestra at his own expense) caused a nall to be engaged and advertisements put out. Such was the interest awakened that the house was sold out a fortinght before the date of playing. The last rehearsal took place in Boston, perhaps on Thursday morning, the New York date being the following Monday. The rehearsal went apparently as usual, the programme being mainly gone through with and corrections being made from time to time. Nothing indicated that Gericke was less pleased than usual. After the close of the reheasal Mr. Gericke called at the office of Mr. Higginson, and after the customary greetings remarked in his usual guiet voice. 'We will not be able to also in Gericke was less pleased than usual. After the close of the reheasal Mr. Gericke called at the office of Mr. Higginson, and after the customary greetings remarked in his usual quiet voice: 'We will not be able to play in New York on Monday.' Mr. Higginson stared and thought his ears must be playing him false. Gericke repeated the statement, in the same quiet voice. 'But,' exclaimed the financial master, 'we have to play; the house is all sold out, and we have promised.' 'I cannot help that,' said Gericke, 'we cannot play next Monday we do not play well enough.' Mr. Higginson is said to have drawn a long breath, and to have remembered that the contract with Mr. Gericke provided that he was to be sole judge of the readiness of the orchestra to play outside Boston. Accordingly he recalled the advertisements, paid back the money for ticke's, paid the hall rent, etc. The following year, when the season was well under way, Mr. Gericke came to Mr. Higginson's office, one day after rehearsal, and remarked, quietly, as before: 'We are ready now to play in New York.' The concert was duly announced, sold out and given. The result was a great triumph, and at one bound the Boston Orchestra established itself as the leading orchestral body in this country.'

[New York Tribune:] Equally valuable for the students of musical history, as well as of singing, is "The Operatic Anthology," now issuing from the press of G. Schirmer, in this city. When the work is complete it will have traversed the whole field of operatic composition from the first work of its kind up to the last—in round numbers, 300 years of opera. The anthology is not a series of volumes, but a series of single pieces, solos, duets, trios, quartettes, etc., which are appearing, simply for convenience's sake, in an alphabetical order arranged according to the titles of the operas. The plan has one great value for those who contemplate adding "The Anthology" to their libraries in that it keeps up the interest by reason of its variety of styles. Had a strictly chronological plan-been adopted, all the compositions which are generally spoken of as having only an antiquarian interest would have come first and might have wearied the students. As it is, though the list of A's has not yet been exhausted, the style of the composers for over two centuries has already had interesting exploitation. The scope which the work is to take may be guessed from the fact that it has required over ninety numbers to reach "Atys." Max Spicker is editing the collection, which will embrace many airs, etc., which have never before been printed, these being largely from Mr. Krehbiel's collection of manuscripts. In the first installment we observe exceedingly interesting airs of this class by Bernasconi. Galuppi, Leonardo da Vinci, Leonardo Leo and Schiassi—composers who are almost strangers even to the most comprehensive musical encyclopedias, but who stood in public favor during the first half of the eighteenth century as the most popular of our composers do today. Mention has been made elsewhere on this rage of the work doing by the Musical Clubs of America. There is no writer or lecturer on musical topics of any prominence who has not been deluged during the last year or two with letters asking for sources of study touching some phase of musical history. The opera has occupied much attention. In "The Anthology" the best of material sume to pronounce judgment.

The time has long passed when the woman who com-poses music was a legitimate object of doubt and ridi-cule for men, but even the tolerant spirit of today does not accord female composers that undisputed rank which some of their best representatives have fairly earned, says Musical America. Their efforts are viewed half cynically by the critics, and one can read in their praise the underlying thought, "Good for a woman." The public knows very little of our prominent female composers, and the following details, taken from a recent artticle in the New York Sun, should prove very recent article in the New York Sun, should prove very interesting reading:

"Mme. Liza Lehmann, who wrote the song cycle, 'In a Persian Garden,' has never received any profits on the great popularity of the work in this country, as it was not copyrighted. She had hard work to get a publisher for it, as nobody could foresee the great vogue which the composition would ultimately attain. It is as much in demand here as it ever was, and is sung from one end of the country to the other. Her father is Rudolf Lehmann, the painter, and she is the wife of Herbert Bodford, also an artist. She was a singer be-

Herbert Bedford, also an artist. She was a singer before her marriage, five years ago.

"Maude Valerie White, whose songs have been sung here by David Bispham and Emma Emmes, is said to make more money from her compositions than any other woman composer in England. Mme. Gay d'Hardelot, who came here three years ago as Mile. Calvés companion, but did not return for a second season, has lately begun to be popular in England as a writer of songs. The rewards of the popular woman composer are very much greater than percons usually suppose. There are consequently a great many struggling for the success which may come to them eventually.

"Mrs. Beach of Boston is probably entited to rank first among the women composers of this country. None first among the women composers of this country. None first among the women composers of this country. None has attempted such ambitious works as she, and het results have been remarkable in view of the field she has entered. Another woman, who might be supposed to represent the opposite extreme, is Emma Steiner. She does not attempt such serious forms as the symphony, but she has composed three comic operas that have been played continuously in spite of the fact that heir performance has generally been confined to such small towns that New York has heard little or nothing of them. They were played in the South.

"Cecile Chaminade of Paris has made a great hit with 'Cecile Chaminade of Paris has made a great hit with her charming plano-pieces and songs. Augusta Holmes of Paris has written a grand opera that was produced and highly praised. She is rather eccentric, and her and highly praised. She is rather eccentric, and her customary costume for evening wear is a dress made in closest possible imitation of a man's dress-suit."

Mme. Johanna Gadski will make an extended tour in this country next season, under the management of Clarence Graff.

At a recent Colonne concert, in Paris, a great triumph was scored by Mile. Relda (Rose Adler,) a young California soprano.

The annual rumor of Jean de Reszke's resolve not to appear again in America arrived on time this summer, and, as usual, agitated only the trans-At'antic cable, says an exchange.

Somebody has said that the three great planists now before the world might be summed up as follows: Rosenthal for technic; Sauer for poetry; and Paderewski for the ladies.

Hugo Heinz, the portly baritone, who came from London to show Americans with what little vocal out-fit one can pose as a singer, has left for England, accompanied by his faithful planist, Frederick Peachy.

An old book on music, by Thomas Walter, 1764, has just been unearthed. Its title is as follows: "The Grounds and Rules of Musick Explained; or, An Introduction to the Art of Singing by Note. Fitted to the Meanest Capacities."

Meanest Capacities."

It is the intention to erect at a certain place in the Thiergarten, the park just outside of the Brandenburg gate of Berlin, statues to Bach, Handel, Mozart, Haydn and other German musicians, beginning with Wagner. At the close of the season of the Alice Nielsen Opera Company, in Chicago, Miss Nielsen signed a contract for five years more with Frank L. Per ey, her manager in "The Fortune-Teller." The contract includes appearances in London and Paris, beginning in London on Easter Monday, 1900. Miss Nielsen's next American appearance will be at the New York Casino.

Georg Henschel's new opera, "Nubia," which will be produced in Dresden next year, is in three acts. The libretto is by Max Kalbeck of Vienna, and is based on a novel of the same name by Richard Voss. The work is very elaborate, calling for five soloists, a soprano, mezzo-soprano, tenor, bass and baritone, and two separate choirs. The great scene, vocally, comes at the beginning of the third act, when a carnival in Rome eginning of the third act, when a carnival in Rome in progress.

Here are two stories about Emil Sauer, the German pianist: One time, while Sauer was a student of music he walked up to a man who was playing the piano at a he walked up to a man who was playing the plano at a country dance, and, tapping him on the shoulder, said:
"My friend, let me show you a few things about playing the plano that you don't know." The man became indignant and a fight ensued. After the disturbance had been quelled Sauer began playing, and was kept at it for four hours. Once, in a German town, when the weather was hot, Sauer decided to have his hair cut, it having grown longer than usual. What was his surprise as he walked past the barber shop the next day to find his shorn hair in the window and for sale at $1 a lock.

PNEUMATIC JAILS THE LATEST.

Various novel forms of jails are proposed from time to time. One scheme was the use of pipes for the bars, so that any attempt to cut them would let out water flowing in them. Another plan of similar nature, based on the use of compressed air, has been worked out very on the use of compressed air, has been worked out very thoroughly. The walls of the vaults or cells are steel tubes spaced about 4½ inches apart, and the floor and ceiling are of double steel plates with an air space between. These tubes and air spaces are all in communication, and are kept filled with compressed air. VALUABLE SUGGESTIONS FOR ACQUIR-ING AND PRESERVING HEALTH.

CONSUMPTION

Mrs. J. Bernstein writes from Santa Rosa to The Times that she had read in a Milwaukee paper of the new consumption cure of Dr. Grotte of Paris, and that it was said a cinic was to be opened in Los A clipping is inclosed from the Milwaukee Herald, a German paper, which says that the cure referred to is that known as formaldehyde gas, which has been liberally advertised in the telegraphic dispatches during the past few weeks.

The Times knows nothing about this project, beyond what has appeared in the dispatches. Local physicians, who have been interviewed on the subject, do not express much confidence in the asserted discovery. Scarcely a month passes without the announcement of some new and marvelous cure for consumption. Of all these, none have so far accomplished what has been claimed for them, although some of them have, doubtless, made their originators wealthy. As The Times has frequently stated, there is nothing in the shape of a consumption cure that can equal pure air-and plenty of it. Any case of consumption that cannot be cured by living out of doors in the mountain regions of Southern California, with plain, substantial, easily-digested food, including as liberal a consumption of oil or cream as the patient can digest, may be considered hopeless. Experienced physicians throughout the world are gradually arriving at this view of the case, although we shall doubtless continue to hear from time to time of wonderful medical cures for consumption, as long as there is money to be made by such enterprises. . . .

HEREDITY.

Reference was made a few weeks ago in this department to strong opinions advanced by eminent German physicians, at the recent tuberculosis conference, to the effect that consumption is not hereditary. This, it was pointed out, is quite a new departure from the usually accepted theory on the subject, and will probably be made the subject of much discussion.

At the graduating exercises of the Pasadena High School recently, the speaker of the evening, Rev. C. G. Baldwin, ex-president of Pomona College, in touching upon the subject, with a view of illustrating what he claims is the small influence of heredity and the overwhelming effect of environment and education, referred to the worker bee and the queen bee. The latter is worth just 40,000 times as much as the former; but they come from the same egg, and the food and room for twenty days, he says, make the difference, deciding whether the bee shall be a worker or a queen valued at 40,000 points more. The speaker expressed his adherence to the doctrine set forth in one of the latest works of a great German psychologist, to the effect that there is no inheritance of intellectual or moral quality, that the inheritance is wholly corporeal. Many will dispute this theory.

QUITE A

The Times referred last week to an error of diagnosis by a Los Angeles physician, who is acting as Health Officer, wherein he insisted that a case of sickness was scarlet fever, whereas it was only measles. A more flagrant case than this is reported from San Francisco, where a woman brought suit for damages against a street railway company, for injuries received. When the case was heard, three physicians of standing testified that they had examined the sufferer, and found that she was afflicted with a huge tumor, which they believed was caused or aggravated by the accident. A few months after the jury had rendered its verdict, the street car company went into court and asked for a new trial, on the ground that a few weeks after obtaining damages to the amount of $20,000, the woman had given birth to a baby. When the judge of the lower court found that the case involved a baby and not a tumor, he ordered the paintiff to refund $15,-000, or a new trial would be granted. This the plaintiff refused to do, and the Supreme Court upheld the order of the lower court for a new trial.

Public opinion in England was re-THE CRIME OF cently much stirred up over the case ABORTION.

of a physician who was convicted of procuring abortion and sentenced to a term of seven years penal servitude. The London Times, commenting on the prevalence of abortion among the women of the upper classes in England, says that these cases throw a lurid light upon some of the consequences of modern luxury, and upon some of the standards of morality which are accepted in certain circles of modern life.

What the Times says is, unfortunately, still more true of this country, where a lucrative practice is carried on, not only by physicians on the outskirts of the profes sion, but by thousands of practitioners who would hate to have it known that they undertake such work.

While we condemn the physician who does these things, we should, however, not forget that the women are to blame who, for the sake of escaping the duties of maternity, tempt medical men by large offers of

So long as there exists so generally in modern society a widespread demand for the services of such mes, may be sure that they will be forthcoming. The wide prevalence for this practice in the United States is astonishing and alarming. It is not at all surprising that a great majority of American women suffer from functional disorders before they reach middle age. There is no country in the world where abortion is so commonly practiced as in the United States. It has been said that in France they support foundling asylums and in America abortionists. It is for students of the social problem to decide which is the better-or worse-plan, but it might be suggested that, possibly, we could dispense with either, and that it is about time for public sentiment to move in this direction. As long as the procuring of abortion is regarded by a majority of American women as a matter of course, in the practice of which they do not lose caste or standing, we can scarcely expect to see any reform in this direction. What is needed is a healthy change of public sentiment on the subject.

If the hygienic properties of the lemon were fully appreciated by the people of this country, California lemon-growers would not have to complain of a poor market for their crop . A writer in Good Health says:

"The relations of fruit to digestion are particularly interesting. Fruit juices are disinfectants. They are germicidal. The juice of the lemon is as deadly to cholera germs as corrosive sublimate, or sulphur fumes, or any other disinfectant. It is so powerful a germicide. or any other disinfectant. It is so powerful a germicide that if the juice of one lemon be squeezed into a glass of water that is then left standing ten or fifteen minutes, the water will be disinfected; it makes little difference where the water has been obtained, or whether it has where the water has been obtained, or whether it has been boiled or filtered. This is a fact worth knowing, for any one of us may find himself under circumstances in which it is impossible to get either boiled or filtered water. In such a case, the juice of a lemon will purify the water perfectiv."

Reference has been made in this VEGETARIANISM department to the remarkable record achieved a short time ago by vege-ENDURANCE. tarians in a long bicycle race. test attracted the attention of German army officials, who instituted an investigation of the subject. in this country, vegetarians have shown remarkable endurance in walking matches, and now a report comes from London that a seventeen-year-old vegetarian bicyclist has made 317 miles in a twenty-four hour road race trial over hill country, unpaced.

Vegetarians certainly have a right to point to these achievements as an evidence that hard work can be done on a non-flesh diet, if, indeed, such evidence were needed, in view of the fact that most of the hard work of the world, from the building of the pyramids to modern times, has been done on a more or less exclusively vegetarian diet. It is well, however, once more to suggest that vegetarianism does not mean a diet of cabbage and turnips. There is a great difference between wheat, and oats, and peas, and beans, which contain from 80 to 90 per cent. of solid nutriment, and vegetables, which are from 85 to 95 per cent. water.

EXERCISE.

Too much emphasis cannot be laid upon the value of exercise. All systems of diet are of little value, unless proper exercise is taken, so that the food may be transformed into healthy blood. In fact, a man is more likely to enjoy good health if he eats anything and everything, and takes regular exercise, than if he diets himself and leads an altogether sedentary life. Pliny gives an account of a Greek physician, residing at Rome, who had so great faith in exercise as a means of restoring health, that he almost wholly abandoned the use of medicinal agents in his treatment of disease, and declared that he was willing to be pronounced a charlatan if he himself ever became ill, or if he died from any other cause than old age or accident. The historian tells us that this wise physician lived to be nearly one hundred years old, and then died as the result of an accident, being still in the enjoyment of vigorous health.

A writer in Good Health has the following in regard to the value of exercise:

"Exercise is one of the most important means by which this stream of the body is kept in constant activity. The stream is accelerated by making the muscles work. Exercise stimulates the appetite, and hence increases the inflow of the stream. Muscular work 'ears down the tissues and increases the outflow of matter. Exercise has an important effect upon the heart. When one is lying down quietly, the average pulse rate is about sixty a minute; when sitting up, it is from sixty-five to sixty-eight; when standing, from seventy-two to seventy-five; when walking at a moderate page, it is seventy-five; when walking at a moderate pace, it is increased to from eighty to eighty-five; when running, it averages about double the ordinary rate. But this increase of heart-beat is not simply an increase in the number of beats a minute; there is also an increase in vigor. Exercise makes the heart beat not only more rapidly, but more forcibly. More blood is sent out through the veins and arteries. In order to do its work through the veins and arteries. In order to do its work in the body, it must pass through the lungs, and here it is purified by taking in caygen from the air. So we find that exercise not only stimulates the heart-rate, but increases the activity of the lungs as well. When the lungs are excited by muscular activity of any kind, one takes in a much larger amount of air. When running, the amount of oxygen absorbed by the body is seven times as great as when one is lying on his back and breathing normally.

"Hence it is evident that exercise is one of the most important means by which the body can be changed, because oxygen is the great vitalizing element in maintaining the activity and vigor of the body. The more oxygen taken into the blood, the more life there will be in the body: the more oxygen that will fell there will be oxygen taken into the blood, the more hie there will be in the body; the more oxygen that gets into the stomach, the better the gastric juice; the more oxygen that finds its way to the liver, the more cheerful the man's outlook upon the world; the more oxygen that is carried to the brain, the more mental work can be done by that organ."

FALLACIES PNEUMONIA.

Dr. James Oliver, writing in the Healthy Home, combats the generally accepted idea that the inclement days of winter are specially favorable to

He says pneumonia is not in any special sense a cold-weather disease. Spring weather is favorable to it; that is, the days of warm sun and cold air, when people throw off their clothing because of the intense heat, and shortly afterwards sit down in the shade, and are chilled by the cold air, still carrying, it may be, a breath from the northern snowbanks. Texas has a death rate from pneumonia of 131/2 per cent.; Massachusetts only 6 per cent. In fact, pneumonia is much more prevalent in all parts of the South than in the North. Dr. Oliver says:

"You can put a man in such circumstances that he will be sure to catch cold, but there is no device known by which you can give him pneumonia any more than you can give a person the measles by exposure. The germ of the disease must first be in the system before it can take root. Nevertheless, if he is exposed to a long ride or to a sudden chill, his chances of contracting pneumonia are very greatly increased."

"The remarks of this article thus far apply to what is known as croupous pneumonia, the disease which is usually meant when perumonia is mentioned.

Bronchial penumonia is mentioned.

Bronchial penumonia is a different disease. It is a fallacy to suppose that croupous pneumonia can result from a cold, it being sudden in its onset, contagious, and an exceedingly acute disease. Bronchial pneumonia may result from a hard cold. Sometimes it extends downward so far as to make it very much, in its later stages, like croupous pneumonia and difficult to distinguish therefrom. tinguish therefrom.

"Congestive pneumonia is still another form of disease. It is very apt to occur as the culminating difficulty of some long sickness, carrying off a great many old people and feeble people who have been invalids for some time. In this disease the lungs seem to fill up and the weak vital forces are unable to throw off the accumulations. cumulations.

"There are no means of prevention, so far as known, for croupous pneumonia. The strong as well as the weak are attacked, but usually the strong who succumb to the attack have been temporarily weakened or have suffered from undue exposure, or some unusual weari-ness or lack of sleep, or a strain from anxiety, have put ness or lack of sleep, or a strain from anxiety, have put the system temporarily in such a condition as to make it susceptible to the infection of the disease.

"In pneumonia coming on after a long debauch with delirium tremens, 99 per cent prove fatal. At 'Cook's County Hospital of Chicago, where such cases are taken from that great city, all prove fatal, as I am informed by a nurse who served for two years in the hospital. Great drinkers succumb most readily to penumonia. Persons with temperate habits are most liabe to withstand a severe attack of pneumonia. While alcohol may be of use to tridge over the crisis of pneumonia, its use is the worst possible thing we can Go to invite the disease. The best safeguard against any acute disease is temperance, sobriety and the observance of the laws of halth."

FEET AND NERVES.

There is much good sense in the remarks of a special contributor in The Times Magazine of Sunday last, garding the disastrous effect of tight shoes on the system-especially the female system, as women are the chief sufferers from this cause. There is not one fashionable woman out of 10,000 who has a foot of natural shape. This would not matter so much, as the foot is not nowadays exposed to the view of the general public, were it not for the fact that the tight squeezing of the foot, in narrow shoes, undoubtedly involves a long train of nervous and other troubles, which are usually ascribed to every cause but the right

OF THE IMAGINATION.

The influence of the imagination over the human body is great, and cannot be successfully denied. power is often availed of by reputable physicians to aid in effecting cures, and by disreputable practitioners to assist in extracting a big fee from their victims. It has often been remarked how a person may read one of those lists of symptoms of various diseases, published by advertising healers, and come to the conclusion that he is an unfortunate sufferer from several, or perhaps all of them. Jerome K. Jerome, in his "Three Men in a Boat," gives the following amusing illustration of this tendency:

"I remember going to the British Museum one day to read up the treatment for some slight aliment of which I had a touch—hay fever, I fancy it was. I got down the book and read all I came to read; and then, in an unthinking moment, I idly turned the leaves and began indolently to study diseases generally. I forget in an unthinking moment, I idly turned the leaves and began indolently to study diseases generally. I forget which was the first distemper I plunged into—some fearful devastating scourge I know—and before I had glanced half way down the list of 'premonitory symptoms' it was borne in upon me that I had fairly got it. I sat for a while, frozen with horror; and then, in the listlessness of despair, I again turned over the pages. I came to typhoid fever; read the symptoms, discovered that I had typhoid fever; must have had it for months, without knowing it; wondered what else I had got. Turned to St. Vitus's dance; found, as I expected, that I had that, too; began to get interested in my case, and determined to sift it to the bottom. And so I started alphabetically, read up ague, and learned that I was sickening for it, and that the acute stage would commence in about another fortalght. Bright's disease, I was relieved to find, I had only in a modified form, and, so far as that was concerned, I might live for years. Cholera I had with severe complications; and diphtheria I memed to have been horn with. I plodded conscientiously through the twenty-six letters, and the only malady I could conclude I had not got was house-maid's knee."

THE WOMAN OF THE TIMES.

By Herself.

HERE is trouble in the Eighth Ward. That lively region, of course, would not be quite happy if trouble of various sorts were not footing it merrily through the highways and byways within its boundaries. But in this particular instance, the trouble is of a sort that is not without interest to outlanders, also. Ostensibly, it is about a bathtub. And, as the up-to-date novelists would say, it is the "psychological moment" for a bathtub to appear as a cause of dissension in that ward. For ever since some of the members of "de push" belonging to that portion of the city's domain made their memorable protest against the ungrammatical speech of ex-Mayor Snyder, the famous Eighth has been growing in sweetness and in light until it has finally reached such a degree of development that it yearns for a bathtub in a schoolhouse. The desire indicates not only the degree of civilization to which the Eighth Ward has attained, but also shows that the ward entertains high hopes of flowering and fruiting into still larger and wider culture and refinement. For the bathtub is the lowest rung on the ladder that leads to all such things. But within that tender bud of culture and refinement which the Eighth Ward is nourishing, there is a worm, and the worm is eating at the heart of the bud of aspiration, and if its work of deadly devastation is not checked, the ward, denied the bathtub upon which it has founded such hopes, is likely to fall back into the slough of despond. The Eighth Ward member of the Board of Education is opposed to the bathtub, and instead of leading his constituents on to the greater glory which awaits them is hauling back on the chariot of progress with all the strength he can exert. Now, that is hardly the attitude to be expected of the representative of a district which is so enlightened as to yearn for a bathtub. Rather, he should be in the very forefront of all his people, waving them on to cleanliness, ready to cut down all who object to being washed, and crying aloud, "On to the bath, my ward, on to the bath!" It is even being said that he has declared that the bathtub would be "a disgrace" to the ward, but the charitable outlander cannot believe that he has been correctly quoted. For, if the representative of the aspirations of the Eighth Ward really held such a despiteful opinion of his constituency, su also. Ostensibly, it is about a bathtub. And, as the up-to-date novelists would say, it is the "psychological for civilization, is not quite so far advanced in the path of progress, does not quite so well understand the place of the bathtub in the ascent toward culture and refinement, as do his supporters.

It is whispered abroad, however, that Dr. Stearns is fighting not so much the bathtub as he is the principal of the school who first made the suggestion. And, furthermore, it is said that the trouble over the bathtub has its origin in an attempt to make a hypodermic injection of the poison of politics into school affairs. If that is the case, Dr. Stearns is a great deal worse than a mere worm in a rosebud. There isn't anything quite mean enough to compare him to.

It is really not at all the proper thing to say, indeed, it is even hazardous in these days when woman insists on being written all in capital letters, but—that Women's Congress over in London comes very near being an absurd sort of gathering. Its very name shows how far those who compose it are from having reached the purpose for which, presumably, it was organized. A "Congress of Women"—as if women had any interests, aims and desires which could be furthered by this sort of flocking off together with their own doll-rags! What sort of a thing would a "Men's Congress" be? The mere idea is absurd, and equally so is the fact which has been gabfesting over in London during the last week. Intelligent women have let themselves be carried away, latterly, with the idea that they were doing great things if they organized a society, elected officers—especially elected officers—and read papers and went as delegates to bigger meetings elsewhere. And the greater part of it is such a lamentable waste of precious time and strength and energy in the winding and unwinding of red tape! It is quite true that the women's clubs that have been organized in such numbers during the last fifteen years have done wonders in the waking up of women, but the women have since gone into such a revel and a riot of clubs! They have begun to think that nothing can be done unless a club has been organized to do it, and a constitution and bylaws have been adopted, and a president and two or three vice-presidents and a secretary and a treasurer have been elected, and a place of meeting has been secured, and a time of meeting fixed upon that will not interfere with the time of meeting of any other clubs to which they belong. And that is all a very difficult and complicated proceeding and requires so much time that when it is all finished up it is time to begin over again and elect officers for the next term and revise the constitution and find another place of meeting. And by that time everybody has forgotten what the club was originally organized It is really not at all the proper thing to say, indeed, world, it really does not seem to have said or done anything that was particularly wise, or helpful, or new, or in any way particularly worth saying or doing. And The Woman cannot help thinking that it is very unwise for women thus to attempt to segregate themselves, to try to separate their interests from those of humankind in general. Whenever women try to do this, they are simply stepping on their own skirts and hindering, instead of helping, the progress of the world. This Women's Congress, like most of the large women's meetings that have ever been held, has been so lamentably deficient in ideas, in helpful, stirring speech, that one longs to whisper to all the women's clubs in the world, "For the sake of modesty, do stay at home hereafter and don't try to palm off your thinestones for diamonds any more."

As a matter of fact, the really able women do not ing. And The Woman cannot help thinking that it is very unwise for women thus to attempt to segregate themselves, to try to separate their interests from those of humankind in general. Whenever women try to do this, they are simply stepping on their own skirts and hindering, instead of helping, the progress of the world. This Women's Congress, like most of the large women's meetings that have ever been held, has been so lamentably deficient in ideas, in helpful, stirring speech, that one longs to whisper to all the women's clubs in the world, "For the sake of modesty, do stay at home hereafter and don't try to palm off your rhinestones for diamonds any more."

usually become delegates to such great meetings of women. They have not time, and they have the sense to know that their wits can be used to better advantage. The greater part of those who go are apt to be the women who run about more than they work, who love to pose in public, the women who are forever misrepresenting their sex. Very few of them have the real ability to say much that is worth while, for, though they have a mental alertness, a quickness of thought, and a readiness of speech, which give them great vogue among the unthinking, they are not students of either books or affairs, and have neither observed nor thought enough to make them representatives of the feminine side of the intellectual movements of the time.

WHAT SPAIN HAS LEFT.

WHAT SPAIN HAS LEFT.

[New York Sun:] In disposing of her remaining possessions in the Pacific Ocean to Germany, Spain retains colonial territories only in Africa and the neighboring waters. These possessions are five towns along the north coast of Morocco, namely Ceuta, Tetuan, Velez de la Gomera, Alhucemas, and Melilla and the Chafarinas Islands; the Canary Islands, which are administered as a province of Spain; the large district of Rio de Oro, fronting on the Atlantic between Capes Bojador and Blanco for about five hundred miles and extending de Oro, fronting on the Atlantic between Capes Bojador and Blanco for about five hundred miles and extending inland from twenty miles in the north to 600 miles in the south, the whole embracing 243,000 square miles, mostly sand, and the possession of the eastern part being contested by France; the little territory of Ifni, on the coast of Southern Morocco, embracing only twenty-seven square miles; in the Gulf of Guinea, the islands of Fernando Po and Annabon; and near the northwest corner of the French Kongo, San Juan, a small section of the mainland drained by the Lower Muni and Campo rivers, whose possession is disputed by France, and Corisco Bay, with its little islands Corsico and Elobey. The colonial empire of Spain is finally reduced to a total area of 247,308 square miles, including the considerable regions of which France claims to be the rightful owner. The areas lost to Spain as the result of the war embrace Cuba, 45,872 square miles; ceded to the United States, 119,356 square miles (Philippines and Sulu islands, 115,300; Puerto Rico, 3668; Guam, 388;) and disposed of to Germany, 610 square miles (Caroline and Pelew islands, 560, and Ladrone Islands, except Guam, 50.) Spain's colonial possessions have been reduced in the past year by 165,838 square miles of territory.

ARCHDEACON FARRAR.

Were Rev. Theodore W. Farrar, D.D., archdeacon of Westminster, London, an American, he would surely be at the front in the controversy now going on among the Episcopalians of the United States over the published beliefs of Dr. Briggs. It is certain, also, that the archdeacon would favor the liberal side of the discussion, for it has long been known that he is one of the most liberal-minded ecclesiastics in all England. Moreover, certain passages in his book on the Bible, published in 1897, are so like the utterances of Dr. Briggs that they might easily be mistaken for his.

"It is because I deeply reverence the Bible, and because I absolutely accept the Word of God which it contains," says the archdeacon in this book, "that I refuse to be guilty of the biasphemy of confusing the words of men with the Word of God, or the inferences of ignorant teachers with the messages of God." Further along he discusses Joshua (for whom he thinks the sun did not stand still,) of Jonah (who was swal-lowed by no, fish, in his opinion,) and other miracles, the truth of which he cannot accept, although described in the Bible. But, like Dr. Briggs, Archdeacon Farrar believes in the incarnation, the resurrection and the ascension Bern in Bombay, the son of an English missionary to India, Archdeacon Farrar is now 68, and his hair and whiskers are almost snow white. But his eye is still bright, his face still shows the flush of health, and his voice is still firm and full. He is a tremendous worker. The parishioners of Westminster are very numerous, and it would be impossible for any one to know them all, but the archdeacon can call the majority by name, and, with several curates to help him, he does the licn's slare of the parochial work. To him this work and his sermons—he preaches two each week—are more important by far than his literary productions, but it is mainly these that have made his fame wo.ll wide. Besides the book quoted from above and his celebrated "Life of Christ." "Life of St. Paul," "Eternal Hcpe." etc., he has written some delightful volumes about British school life, and his contributions to the periodical and newspaper press have been voluminous.

ish school life, and his contributions to the periodical and newspaper press have been voluminous. The archdéacon's study is located within the precincts of Westminster, overlooking the abbey's serene inclosure. It is abundantly supplied with such books as a scholar, worker and preacher like him would naturally select. Artistic canvases hang on the walls and the general effect is soothing and restful, though no one can enter the apartment without perceiving at once that it is the workshop of a busy man.

The archdeacon begins his work daily not later than 8:30 o'clock in the morning and rarely finishes before 10 at night. Sometimes he spends a part of the after-

The Koch Medical Institute FOR THE CURE OF

CONSUMPTION

And all diseases of the respiratory organs, herewith append a report of the first 300 cases of pulmonary tuberculosis treated at this insti-tute by the WHITMAN METHOD. These patients all came under treatment during the first two years of our special work, which was begun in this city four years ago, and they are today in full possession of health restored. Many can be seen in this city; others may be communicated with. We have their addresses.

We are in regular practice, responsible for what we say and do, and cordially invite those who want further evidence of our su in curing CONSUMPTION to come to the KOCH MEDICAL INSTI-TUTE and satisfy themselves of the truthfulness of our statements. We court honest, sincere investigation, have no secrets, and are only too glad to show all interested and candid people what we are doing for suffering humanity. We refer to our present and former patients, one or more of whom may be found in nearly every locality in the United States. To all who are under our treatment we devote our highest energies and skill, realizing that an untold blessing is conferred upon each person whom we cure, and that such cures insure the permanency of our business.

We are careful not to assume the treatment of incurable cases, coept when requested to do so for the purpose of mitigating suffering, or prolonging life; for we never wish to encourage false hope of recovery. We refer with pride to the extraordinary large percentage of cures he with reported, and if desired will take pleasure in referring to hundreds of additional cases.

OUR HOME TREATMENT

Has long since passed the experimental stage, and we now unhesitatingly recommend its use to all consumptives who are unable to come to the Institute. Call or send for question blank, report of cured cases, and our booklet on "Consumption; Its Cause and

SLANKY, SLANKIER, SLANKIEST,

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, June 26.—Slanky, slankier, slankiest has been the progress of the season, but a revolt of woman is already in the wind for autumn. At this very minute in Paris the fate of the winter styles is hanging in the balance. The heads of the great dressmaking establishments are in conference, and one bit of news has leaked out, that is, we are to have larger sleeves next autumn. Let us hope we are also to have shorter next autumn. Let us hope we are also to have shorter, fuller skirts for our latitude of body has been so dreadfully sacrificed to secure excessive longitude that womankind begins to bear, when in her grand Parisian toilet, less resemblance than ever to humanity and a more and more striking likeness to a dragon-fly.

Now, behold, in the interest of what has been said above, some of the wraps that are typical and influential in the realms of the smartly dressed. Black silk and pongee and brilliantine dust cloaks are strong elements in every full wardrobe, and some of them are made with great art, while capes with three falls, knee long redingotes and cutaway topcoats in very light melton, covert, sand cloth and Scotch reversible are the wraps taken along when junketing about on yachts, steamers and at cooler northern resorts.

the wraps taken along when junketing about on yachts, steamers and at cooler northern resorts.

One and all these comforters are cut to grip the figure closely from neck to knee. Capes depending in three falls are the newest design, and there is no gracious flare at shoulders or hips. On the capes, in place of the time-honored though superfluous hood, a scarf of bright silk is draped about the shoulders. Either a Highland plaid or a silk showing Roman bands is adopted, and this undeniably has a pleasing effect against the sober browns and grays which all the capes are colored.

Summer Outing Coats.

Summer Outing Coats.

The really lovely dust cloaks seem almost imperative adjuncts of the driving toilets, at golf tournaments, polo games, etc., and ostensibly they serve as protections against glare and dust, for the delicate muslin, lace and foulard gowns they cover. In reality they do duty as foils for the ethereal toilets and their high, Medici collars, all frilled with lake, answer as fine backgrounds for flowery bonnets.

A perfectly-loose sacque of lightest gray waterproof cloth, failing to the knees and belted by a band of the same goods, is the smart sea wrap, whether for yachting, pacing the sands by moonlight or crossing the crean, and a queer output of the season is a growing partiality among women for wearing caps. At the seaside younger women have suddenly developed a profound liking for a big, pudding-shaped affair of the roughest white serge, gathered at the center of the top to a huge red-silk ponpon. A broad, white-silk visor, lined with pale-pink taffeta, juts well out over the face, and this, with a vell of the faintest pearl-pink chiffon la'd over the face, crossed at the back of the head and tied under one ear with a bow, and ends nearly a yard long, is one of the favorite caps for yachting.

Golfing women are finding comfort in gray-felt

A HALF-MOURNING NEGLIGEE

No more elegant negligée has been seen this seasun than the one above, designed for a Bar Harbor belle in half-mourning. The petticoat of liberty silk is trimmed with six narrow ruffles of white-silk muslin, the edge of each finished with black chiffon and a ribbon frill of white-satin ribbon. The big loose overcoat is of liberty satin, having a chiffon-bordered circular fiounce giving style to the whole. The voke, collar and head of giving style to the whole. The yoke, collar and head of flounce show a graceful applique of black lace, an effect duplicated on the long, full sleeves.

Robin Hoods that are the quaintest, prettiest caps out. The crown of a Robin Hood is round, fits the head easily, is moderately high, and against this the unbound two-inch-wide brim, that diminishes to a mere nothing in the rear, turns up on both sides, so that a long-pointed visor extends over the eyes. On one side, where the brim flattens against the crown, a long, very flexible cock quill is thrust through slits in the felt; on the other side a rosette of bright silk fastens brim and crown together with a bright brass or steel-disk button. Beside these novelties is the polo that tennisplaying girls use, while those who ride about awheel or a-horse lean to the easy-stitched cloth M. F. H., which is cut on an enlarged pattern of the velvet cap a master of the fox hounds wears.

The one drawback to the caps is that only young and pretty women look well in them, and no woman, if she has passed the first quarter-of-a-century mark should attempt a cap unless she is slim, small and looks five years less her age.

All women will do well to adopt the liberty-silk streamers that were first introduced at the French races in the spring. A piece of the filmy silk, some three yards long and nearly a yard wide, every woman who drives or sails this summer, wears, tied in a big bow under her chin, with loops and ends flaunting to the breeze, and some of them buy very transparent chiffon and cover their large hats and their faces with it as a veil, cross the scarf, knot it under the chin and throw the ends to the breeze. Nothing seems more daintily feminine than these fairy sails, usually sweetly Milled by Its Own Popularity.

Definitely the chain is gone. Too great popularity killed it. In its place the bangle ventures to put forth, but the result is doubtful, and by determinedly putting off their watches women have ceased to make themselves the slaves of time. In truth, never was so little jewelry worn as in this summer of grace, and the fancy for oriental patterns is as marked as ever. At night in the cofffure very charming wreaths of small, clear, green-enameled leaves, ivy, myrtle, laurel, bay and grape foliage fasten among puffs and braids, and sometimes a row of leaves forms the top edging for a tucking comb

Nothing could be tresher or more entirely girlishlooking than this little July toilet for a lass of 12 years of age. Thread gloves, having for years been the joy of the simple and sensible, have recently been taken up with a rush by the fashionable and rather freakish element. This is chiefly because with their capital suede lisle gloves the manufacturers have achieved a cotton hand covering that fits exactly and smartly. Thread gloves in a variety of soft tones are very preferable to silk, and women with pretty plump hands and arms wear elbow-sleeved mustins in the afternoon, with flesh, pink or lifac suede lisle gloves reaching to the crook of the arm and end of the sleeve. One potent argument in favor of these hand coverings is that not only are they cool, perfect protectors against sun burn, but they wash just like lisle-thread stockings.

Gauze-thread hose and hand-embroidered stockings are the choice for wear, with slippers in place of the luxurious spun silk, and though of linen woven they are no less costly than the best silken web. Some of the hand-embroidered hose have tiny, green leaves and scarlet berries strewn on black ground, or minute butterflies and dragon-flies are pricked out on the gauzy film of linen. All these fragile splendors are set off with low-heeled, perfectly-plain, black-satin slippers, shaped with wedge toes and cut as low as possible about the foot.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, June 26.—The society season of sport is wide open, and the tendency of women in the smart set seems steadily turning toward specialties in one exercise or another. Few fashionable dames or damoselles appear to have the time or inclination to develop themselves into all around athletic women, and she who scores best at golf does not pretend to stand in with the circle of horse-lovers or know an anchor from a bin-

This charming little garment is one of the daintiest specimens of lingerie sold this season. It is a combination of chemise, corset-cover and under-petticoat. The material is fine French batiste, trimmed elaborately with Valenciennes lace. A tucked-edged frill is set on the skirt, and about neck and sleeves is a wide bertha, cut in points, so trimmed that it serves perfectly as an underwaist, without the clumsiness of an extra garment. summer the flock of air human ducks is bigger than ever. All along the coast the women are making stunning records in the water, and Mrs. Regis Post, for example, has pretty nearly broken all former standards for diving. Given a pool of deep water and a spring board this slim woman flexible as a piece of whalebone, can put your heart in your mouth by her surprising exploits. She will take the water head on after turning a couple of times in the air like a circus rider, or plunge into the sea from the highest point to which she can climb on her husband's yacht.

At Narragansett Pier the crack swimmer is fair, slender Miss Robitson, who can strike cut farther beyond the surf into the cold Atlantic waves than most men who have tried to measure her strength, and Miss Helen Benedict has silver cups to prove that she is one of the most daring and graceful divers that ever took the waters of Long Island Sound head on.

summer is for the women guests, off on a yachting party, to dive from the side or bowsprit of the gallant schooner or steamer with all the nonchalance of the most seasoned salt. Not to be able to do this much is as great a disgrace as to foczle your ball when playing with a good golfer. with a good golfer.

Their Turn at the Tiller.

Curiously enough, it is not given the women who swim, dive and execute marvelous gymnastics in the water to make the most capable sailors, nor is it the sailor women who develop into the first-class swimmers, and a short while since the art of yachting made small appeal to womankind. Society of the gentler sort has been recently, however, bitten with a mild marine fever, and the ambition of every woman whose husband, brother or sweetheart owns a boat, is to qualify herself to take her turn at the tiller.

Mrs. George Gould is one of the energetic souls who thinks it more fun to guide a huge steamboat through the waves than trot a four-in-hand, and last summer she took a course of lessons in navigation from her she took a course of lessons in navigation from her husband's yacht captain. This season she takes the wheel as often as not, and puts the handsome steamer through her paces as cleverly as a first-class pilot.

Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt is a new recruit to the list of feminino suilors. She has chartered a steam yacht for cruising about European waters, and is going to learn how to run her boat herself, if it is necessary to get out papers and study hard to do it. Mrs. Paget is a third candidate for nautical joys. She, too, will have a superb steamboat for the summer, and stand at her own wheel the explore the coast or run down the St. Lawrence, and not least of these lady pilots is Mrs. Howard Gould, who knows how to make the Niagara show her hee's to pledding merchant and passenger show her hec's to pledding merchant and passenger

Among the very capable sailing pilots, who scorn the lumbering steam pleasure boats, is Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr. On the A'eutis or Veda she uses the tiller with a wrist of steel and perfect judgment, and Mrs. H.C. Trevor is not a bit less skillful. Another smart yachtswoman is Miss Emily Hoffman, and Newport knows no abler seawomen than the two handsome young daughters of Mrs. Orme Wilson, for they vastly prefer the sea to the shore, a day's hard work with tiler and sails to a night's dancing, and a talk with a barnac'ed old sait to the society of the smartest youth in the social register. From all these evidences it will be gathered that we are in a fair way to owning a Great American Country Houses.

Our rich Americans are nothing if not hospitable, and in the country houses that have just been completed, or are going up at choice resorts, the chief command of the owner to the architect has been for p'enty of guest rooms. At Henry Villard's huge house on the Hudson provision is made for two dozen friends at once, by means of a second house erected in the grounds, where bedrooms only are provided. This is less cozy than the wise arrangement in the tremendous home of John Sloan at Lenox, Mass., where fourteen guest chambers are arranged under one roof, and then, in a ponderous square red tower, the ample room space is given up wholly to the comfort of any ten bachelors who may be included in a party.

wholly to the comfort of any ten bachelors who may be included in a party.

Perhaps the top notch of guest accommodation has been reached by that fashlonable and generous hostess, Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, for, under the red roof of her gray stone mansion in the Berkshires, she is able to shelter in uncrowded content sixty friends simultaneously. There are mighty few spreading English castles that can beat this record, and this is but one of Mrs. Stokes's institutions for making her friends happy. She also keeps going a luxurious camp in the Adirondacks, where no less than eighteen persons can lodge with quite royal ease, and her closest rival in this happy scheme of things is Mrs. Seward Webb, whose truly palatial mountain camp can hold twenty fortunates under its sheltering tents and log huts.

George Vanderbit is able easily to put up half a hundred guests at Biltmore, it is true, but he rarely taxes his great chateau to its lutmost, while Mrs. Walter Webb at Scarborough, Mrs. William D. Sloan at Lenox, Mrs. Twombly at Morristown, and Mrs. Thorne at Millbrook keep their twenty guest rooms aplece easily full all the season through.

CHINESE COOKS AND TELEPHONES,

AN INNOVATION THAT HAS BROUGHT COMFORT TO SAN FRANCISCO HOUSEKEEPERS.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

In San Francisco, where cooking and matters pertaining to the kitchen are the subject of much thought, there has been introduced what is known as the kitcher telephone, and it has been voted such an unqualified success that no well-appointed house is without a "helle machine" in its kitchen.

To send the cook out to order the dinner was found to be accompanied by various drawbacks. The trades men were disposed to "guy" the Celestials; the Celes tials were not averse to paying a visit to the neares fan-tan game when sent on an errand, and the trouble that followed in the train of this dereliction of duty were almost too numerous to enumerate. So the house

It is now considered a far more distinguished honor to be is now considered a far more distinguished honor to be asked on a round of country house parties than air one's gowns on Bellevue avenue, a far more notable thing to possess a house with forty guest rooms and fifty acres of lawn, than a splendid jewel box affair perched on a cliff, and all this proves that our social ideas are rapidly changing, until baronial halls and deer-haunted parks will be as much the acme of good taste and splendor here as on the other side.

When riches slip out at the window our fashionable folk by no means permit poverty to ome in at the door. If you have the interest just pick up the business directory and find how assiduously and profitably dame industry has been culvitated by men and women who began life in the lap of luxury. The success with which they do this is the result of the modern tendency for educating even the wealthiest boys and girls to learn a trade, or an art that at any moment could be turned into a profession.

In the list of fashicnable breadwinners we find milliners, dressmakers, landscape gardeners, actresses florists, lawyers, designers, caterers and restaurant wives set about to discover some means of communicating with the provision dealer, the grocery man and the fruit merchant, without the necessity of sending a, mes senger to them, and the telephone was the result of their cogitations.

It took a long time to get the Chinese cooks educated up to the idea that the telephone was a perfectly harmless invention. Every Chinese cook in the West had not read that Confucius speaks of the use of the telephone in deceiving the guileless Chinamen of thousands of years ago, and it required a special meeting of the Chinese cooks, at which the story was read to them, to convince them that the god of the telephone would not visit his wrath upon their heads if they dared to exorcise him in the way suggested by the white employers. The story, told by an intelligent Chinaman, who was pressed into the service by the San Francisco women when they were endeavoring to educate their cooks up when they were end avoring to educate their cooks up to using the telephone, went on to say that the priests of the time of a few thousand years before Confucius had two temples, in one of which the confession of the Chinamen would be received. Then the confessor would be told to go post haste to the other temple, where the second priest would grant him absolution. While the Chinaman was covering the space between the two temples, the first priest was hard at work telephoning the substance of the confession to the second one, so that by the time the Chinaman arrived at the second temple his story was ready to resied off to him until he was compelled to grovel before the supernatural being who possessed such powers of divination. Since the innovation described the telephone and tele-

HOW "THE CAT" WON THE RACE,

A STIRRING STORY OF THE GLORIOUS FOURTH IN THE WILD WEST.

"Arrowhead! Arrowhead!"

There was no answer. The broad meadows by the cottonwood-bordered river were utterly silent and lone

"Arrowhead!" cried the boy anxiously. Riding his own and leading his friend's captured runaway pony, he came down from a gallop to a lope, and a lope to a walk, and last to a halt. The grass grew high beside the stream, so high that it would conceal even a large object from view. Charlie Allen looked all about from the vantage of his saddle.

"This is p'easant," said Charlie ruefully. "I didn't think the Cat could ever throw him and then run away like that, but where on earth did the brute throw him to? He can't have pitched him into the river."

From the fort came the blare of the band as it/played

From the fort came the blare of the band as it played the new guard to parade in front of the adjutant. At the sound Charlie almost wept.

"Half past nine and half an hour wasted trying to catch this beast of an old Cat. The fun will begin right after guard mount, and I'll miss the tug of war. I wonder if Arrowhead could have been killed by the fall! Arrowhead! O Arrowhead, where are you? Arrowhead!"

There came from the high grass a dozen yards away a prolonged groan, a violent sneeze, and a great, gutteral, disgusted "Ugh!" Charlie Allen rose in his stirrups with a cry of relief.
"Hooray! Jiminy, but I thought you were dead, Arrowhead! I've caught the Cat. Are you hurt?"
From the concealing grass arose to a sitting position a queer figure, with long black hair, the blackest and brightest of eyes, and a coppery complexion. It was an Indian boy of about Charlie's age. Although an Indian, however, and from the reservation near the post where Col. Allen commanded, he was not drested like an Indian, but almost as neatly as Charlie's instead of the poots.

"Hurry up!" cried the colonel's son. "The Cat's all right for the race. He is not winded at all. He gave me a dance to catch him though. Say, are—are you really hurt?"

"Fell on my head," said the Indian laconically, in excellent English. "It's sore, but my leg—it's—"

"Not broke! Oh! Murder! won't you be able to ride?
Perhaps "it's only bruised. Oh! Arrowhead, try!"
Arrowhead tried and rose stoically to his feet, stifling groan. Charlie dismounted and led the ponies to him.

The leg had apparently struck against a ragged stump of wood when the Indian had been thrown from his pony, and the inside, above the knee was bruised and bloody.

"Just where you will have to press it to guide the Cat.
It'll be stiff and swollen by the afternoon when the races come off. It's all up, Arrowhead. The Cat and you are out of it, and Man-With-a-Tail will laugh at "."

The Indian boy's eyes assumed the steady, inscrutable stare of the American aborigine, and his jaws set firmly as he sat down again in the grass holding in his hand the bridle of the now obedient Cat, who had caused all this trouble, but was nibbling grass at present as if he had never done anything wrong in all his life. Charlie sat down also, disconsolate.

"You beast," said he to the Cat, "you might have won the race and the prize and glory, and now you've specified everything. You beast!"

"Me," said the Indian stolidly, "me shall ride the Cat all the same."

"With that leg?" said Charlie. "I'd like to see you—you couldn't grip him. You'd have another fall and the Indians on the reservation would never let you hear the end of it."

So they fell to silent reflecting, and heard the pistol

So they fell to silent reflecting, and heard the pistol shot from the post which announced that the first of the sports had commenced. Soon a great clamor of voices and loud cheers sounded all over the plain round worker and found cheers sounded an over the plain round about the post.

"That's the tug of war," said Charlie, but they made no move, for their Fourth of July was spoiled to them. Thus they sat for a long time, when suddenly the colonel's son clapped his friend on the shoulder and cried with sparkling eyes, "I've got it! Man-With-a-Tail won't win yet!"

Nowhere in all the United States is the glorious Fourth more gloriously celebrated than in those spots of the Western Plains where the Stars and Stripes waves eternally over the garrisons of Uncle Sam's boys in blue. At Fort S——, which Col. Allen commanded, great preparations had been made for the day.

The post was a large eight company one, with four troops of cavalry and a battalion of infantry. Besides these there was a company of Indian scouts in camp near by, and an Indian reservation only a mile or two away. The programme for the day included the usual athletic sports with a baseball game between cavalry and infantry teams, and a shooting match between and infantry teams, and a shooting match between teams of the same at the target ranges. These were for the morning, but, in the afternoon, came the events which were to the majority the most exciting. There which were to the majority the most exciting. There were several prizes for cavalry races, a prize for a cowboy race, and a prize for the wildest, most dashing race of all, that between the Indians on their ponies.

It is not usual for white boys, and especially commanding officers' boys, to make close friends of the children on the reservation—the dirty Indian children, but Charlie Allen when II years all would have been children on the reservation—the dirty Indian children, but Charlie Allen when 11 years old would have been drowned in the swollen river if the Indian boy Arrowhead had not been passing on his pony. He swam, horse and all, to the rescue of the "Big White Chief's" son, and saved his life. They said at the post that Charlie was as mischlevous and wicked as any boys are made, but ingratitude was not one of his faults. He saw to it that Arrowhead—a most intelligent and honest boy—should be taken in hand by the colonel, who sent A GOLF SUIT the boy to the mission close at hand, and had him educated and dressed just like a white boy. Arrowhead's father did not object to this, but most of the reservation Indians did, particularly "Man-With-a-Tail," an obstreperous young brave a few years older than Arrowhead. This youth had made, whenever possible, Arrowhead's life a misery, calling him "squaw" and sneering at him for learning the white man's ways, and discarding the blanket as an article of attire.

So—Arrowhead owned the Cat. a fleet little Indian pony, and his enemy owned another. Everywhere "Man-With-a-Tail" had boasted that he would win this race on the Fourth, especially sneering at the pretensions of Arrowhead, who had entered the Cat. In such Indian races, men and boys run together.

And now, in the morning quiet, Charlie and Arrowhead had gone out to give the Cat a last trial, and Arrowhead had been hurt, and what was to be done?

Charlie appeared at lunch and astonished the colonel by not knowing who had won any of the events of the morning.

"I couldn't attend" said Charlie, with admirable by not knowing who had won any of the events of the morning.

"I couldn't attend," said Charlie with admirable gravity. "I was engaged on important business."

"Now, Charlie," said his mamma, "you've been in some mischief. What have you been doing? The idea of you not seeing even the baseball game, and you were so excited about it."

"I was sorry to miss that" said the boy with a sight so excited about it."

"I was sorry to miss that," said the boy with a sigh,
"but you know, colonel, it is often necessary to sacrifice one's own desires to a sense of duty. Will you excuse me? I have the most urgent things to attend to." He laughed and ran out.

III.

They were at the course; everybody except the unlucky men on guard was at the course, and everybody was yelling and cheering and laughing. The colonel was all about like a boy, on his big sorrel charger, directing things with enthusiasm. Mrs. Allen was there in her carriage and got so excited that she never noticed that Charlie was not near her on his pony.

"Man-With-a-Tail," seated stolidly on his racing pony, was also marveling inwardly at the absence of Arrowhead, and innumerable friends were asking each other—"Where on earth's the colonel's kid?" Charlie was a popular boy, even if he were mischievous, and Mrs. Allen got nervous, as one officer after another cantered up to pay his respects, always ending his speech with a "By the way, where is Charlie? We've missed him all day."

"Not at all," the old man answered. "He'll turn up all right."

"He may be drowned," said the mother, "and you cannot expect Arrowhead to be there to save him every time. Which reminds me that Arrowhead will know where Charlie is. "Arrowhead!" cried the lady.

"It's all right, my dear," said the commanding officer. "I gave him permission. That young scoundrel on the reserve, Man-With-a-Tail, has been taunting him because he belongs to the mission. I believe little Arrowhead can beat him ridding or shooting."

Now the course arranged for the Fourth of July fun was only used that one day in the year. It was a mile

Now the course arranged for the Fourth of July fun was only used that one day in the year. It was a mile in length with a turn at the half, where the river ran, and at that turn there was a clump of cottonwood. As the whole race could be viewed from the starting line or the winning post, every one gathered about these points, and the turn was deserted.

It was the last event of the day before parade, and the sun was gently descending toward the distant mountains.

The reds, eight in number, each on his fleetest pony, gathered at the post, where the young officer stood with a pistol, at whose crack the riders were to be off. They were all young men, Man-With-a-Tail the youngest, about 19 years old. They all rode bareback, without stirrups and only a watering bridle to guide their restless little horses.

Their costumes were to say the least scenty. Their costumes were to say the least scenty.

Their costumes were, to say the least, scanty. Their costumes were, to say the least, scanty. Their ng black hair in many cases floated loose in the wind. hey each wore a shirt, but their long, brown, wiry legs gripped the pony's sides, inadorned by any riding breeches. They were, to all in ent, parts and members each of the pony beneath him.

They answered to their names and were duly entered for the race, when a short arose from the crowd. "Hold on! Where's Charlie's chum? Where's Arrowhead? Where's the Cat?"

"He will not race with his ather's people," grunted an old Indian. "He is a mission boy. He does not wear the blanket. He is too proud."

"We cannot wait," cried the starter, when suddenly from over a bluff came gently loping the Cat, and on its back—Arrowhead. His nea: clothes were cast saide. In all respects he was like the other riders, save that his shirt—all white—was cleen, but until he reached the post he wore a blanket. His legs were brown, his face was brown, but his dark hair was remarkably short for an Indian. He rode up, was entered, hustled into place in a second, before anyone had time to examine closely him or his pony.

Man-With-a-Tail looked disappointed and sullen, for the prize was a big money one, and he quickly put his hand to his breast where his shirt had pockets, and patted them as if to make sure he had not lost anything.

"Crack!" went the pistol and they were off, and the hand to his breast where his shirt had pockets, and patted them as if to make sure he had not lost anything.

"Crack!" went the pistol and they were off, and the crowd yelled and cheered. The ruck of them went away as if they had only 200 yards to go, but Man-With-a-Tail and Arrowhead held back more wisely. It was a wild scene. The Indians did not ride like jockeys. They sat almost straight up, their shirt tails and long hair streaming behind, their faces affame with the ferocity of savage rivalry, and their black eyes gleaming like those of beasts in rage. The little ponies, lashed by stinging whips, sped along like jack rabbits. The crowd yelled; the ladies rose up in their carriages half afraid.

Down the course they tore, and before a quarter of the distance was done, the more furious of the leaders had lost their place, and slowly and surely, Man-Witha-Tail was pulling up, and Arrowhead was close behind. Then arose sundry cries from the spectators.

"Look at Arrowhead! See how he's stooping like a cowboy with his nose on his pony's neck!"

"Where did the kid learn to ride like that? He'll win!"

"No-Man-With-a-Tail!"
"Arrowhead! Arrowhead!"
"Man-With-a-Tail wins!"

ing out.
"By-the-by, have you seen Charlie?" his wife asked.
The commanding officer burst into an extraordinary

The commanding officer burst into an extraordinary shout of laughter.

"Yes!" he yelled, and galloped off to the winning post. The horses were at the bend; Man-With-a-Tail had pushed to the front; Arrowhead was close behind him; Man-With-a-Tail looked over his shoulder, and his face was horrible as he saw the Cat drawing nearer and nearer. His hand went to his pocket and came out with a fistful of something. Of a sudden the nearer spectators, lining the course gave a great shout of astonishment and alarm for, from the cottonwood sprang with a cry—Arrowhead! -Arrowhead!

cry—Arrowhead!
Arrowhead it was as they all knew him, in his neat clothes. He gave such a terrible yell and jumped so nearly in front of Man-With-a-Tail's pony that that pcny almost halted with its forefeet slithering. Its head went up to fright, and struck the Indian's closed fist, so that it opened and was knocked against the rider's face, scattering in his eyes the handful of red pepper which he had intended for his rival's eyes when he came up close.

pepper which he had intended for his rival's eyes when he came up close.

The Cat went on, an easy winner, but its rider had no intention of stopping. He tried to gallop over the bluff whence he had come, but the colonel shouted out a command:

'Stop that horse! Bring it here!"

"Stop that horse! Bring it here!"

The rider came back.

"Charles, you scamp!" cried the colonel, "Go at once, sir, and get that paint off and dress yourself before your mother sees you!"

So the false Arrowhead went off shamefacedly, but the soldiers and the colonel himself shouted with laughter when he had gone. The Indians were-very angry, but when it was explained to them how Man-With-a-Tail, now suffering agonies and almost blind, would have played such a mean trick, they fell upon him with words of wrath, and the prize was given to the man who came in second. Man-With-a-Tail was forever humbled, and disgraced, and the boys were satisfied without the prize, so long as the young scholar's enemy was silenced forever to taunt and jeer.

You see the real Arrowhead knew something of Indian wiles, and, when, watching in the bushes, he saw the rascal who hated him put his hand in his pocket, he jumped to the right conclusion, and promptly did the best thing possible to save again his white friend and benefactor from harm. And, as the deception after all was in a good cause, both boys were let off with a lecture.

"But," said Mrs. Allen, "I shall take good care.

"But," said Mrs. Allen, "I shall take good care Charlie, that you stay beside me next Fourth of July." P. Y. BLACK.

GIRLS WHO EMBRACED LITTLE VICTORIA OF KENT WHEN SHE WAS ONE YEAR OLD.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

At Raleigh, in the county of Essex, has just died an old lady, almost a centenarian, who enjoyed a certain popularity in the neighborhood. She was called "The had, in fact, kissed Her Majesty on both cheeks in ex-change for a piece of silver. This is the story:

The little Princess of Kent was about a year old, and her nurse used to walk with her every day under the trees in the park of Richmond. One day in summer, the nurse met the young ladies of a neighboring school the nurse met the young ladies of a neighboring school promenading. Among them was a pupil whose father was employed at the princely house. She pointed out the royal baby to her companions and they all surrounded the nurse and begged permission to embrace the infant. "Let each of us give her a kiss, and we shall give you each a shilling."

The nurse reëntered the palace with a nice little sum of money, and ingenuously told of the adventure.

The Duchess of Kent at once sent her physician to the school to find out the state of the health of the young girls who had indulged in such audacious familiarity. She was reassured. The pupils were scolded, and the Duke of Kent made an expression of paternal pride which chroniclers have preserved.

"Nurse," he said, to the weeping servant, "you are pardoned. For my part, do not think it wrong for my daughter to be admired. Nothing more natural. It is the finest baby in the world. But for the future 1 forbid you to let her be kissed for less than a guinea. And yet, that is for nothing!"

After this incident the pupils of the school formed a sort of association under the name of Society of the Queen's Kiss, and when the Princess Victoria of Kent meunted the throne, they recalled themselves to her memory. "We are," they said, "the first among your subjects from whom Your Majesty has received homage."

At all important occasions the Society of the Queen's Kiss addressed new homage to the sovereign, but the number of members grew less, and there only remained those days the old lady of Raleigh. The Society of the Queen's Kiss is now extinct.

WHEN THE POPE WAS YOUNG.

HE WAS ALWAYS SURPRISED AT HIS SUCCESS AND WAS A DEVOTED STUDENT.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

Here is a rare portrait of Pope Leo XIII when he was a student in Rome. It was taken when he was 19 years old, exactly 70 years ago. Gioachino Pecci way then registered at the Collegio Romano, and while no one dreamed of his becoming Pope, he was already making his mark as a scholar. He had left his first school at Viterbo five years before taking up logic, and mathematics in addition to the other branches, and then passing on to rhetoric, philosophy and theology. Only a year after this portrait was taken he passed so brilliant an examination at the college that to this day may be read upon the official records of the institution after the name of Gioachimo Pecci, "He is destined for higher things." And it was at this college that he re-ceived his degree of doctor of theology two years later

While he was a most conscientious student, gaining many honors in the schoolroom, he did not forget as many theologians have, that there was a great active world in which he lived, and he used to find his chief recreation in going to a quiet coffee house to read the papers and learn what was going on. Notwithstanding the fact that he suffered great pain from throat affection at this time, and did not expect to live long, he continued to work with such success that he gained many prizes for scholarship and was highly praised by his teachers. He was not spoiled by his success, and while writing home with pardonable pride after each examination was passed with flying colors it is always with that true humility of real greatness which wonders how and why it succeeds. When the course at the Collegio Romano had been completed the delicate student entered the Accademia dei Nobili Ecclesiastici, a kind of postgraduate theological college, gaining new honors by his thesis on "Appeals to the Pope," which he defended with great eloquence and erudition before the Pope himself.

He writes to his brother: "I have won two medals his year, and shall be happy to show them to you the Pope himself.

He writes to his brother: "I have won two medals this year, and -shall be happy to show them to you when I come home." And then goes on to tell of the latest news at Rome, of the election of the Pope to succeed Leo XII, or some other interesting occurrence. He was a student not only of books, but also of men and his time, and he has continued to be just so broad and thorough a student all his long and honorable life. It is hard to trace a resemblance between this youthful face and the well-known pictures which we see almost daily, yet in the eyes and brow there is the same man even though 70 years stand between him then and now.

THE LION NOT SO SAVAGE.

JOHN B. DORIS SAYS THE KING OF BEASTS IS AS EASY TEMPERED AS A HOME DOG.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

John B. Doris, a former-circus proprietor of some thirty years' experience, once stated that there is no occasion for fear. In fact the lion roars when he feels in a particularly happy mood, and he can no more restrain himself than a dog can keep from barking. The sound is perhaps not pleasant, and the sight of the great open laws far from reassuring, but then he really means nothing. It is only his little way.

Mr. Doris was once making ready for the road in the Exposition Building at Indianapolis. There were some three hundred men at work in the building, when through the carelessness of an attendant two of the lions slipped out of their cage and made straight for a couple of barrels of fat saved from the animals' food. In less than fifteen minutes the three hundred men had disappeared through doors and windows, but the attendant coolly seized first one lion and then the other by the scuff of the neck and in turn fairly booted them buck to their cage.

In regard to the spectacular effect of a tamef in a lion's dep, there is always a deal of humbug. While the half-terrified public looks on, both man and beast are performing a part that has been well rehearsed beforehand, and the animals are thoroughly proficient in their respective casts. Separately and together they are put through their tricks leaping over poles and through hoops of flame. With apparently reckless regard for life, but knowing well what he is about, the keeper thrusts his head between the lion's jaws. When he discharges a pistol several times the animals scamper round in apparent paroxyms of rage and fear, and when finally he dashes out—all a very clever little stage performance.

If any proof were needed to prove that the lion is not stage performance.

If any proof were needed to prove that the lion is not

If any proof were needed to prove that the lion is not to be feared, one has but to watch an ordinary attendant enter the cage to clean it. He sweeps the dirt right and left without the least attention to his majesty, who, unless he keeps out of the way, is as likely as not to get a broomful of dust in the face.

The only animals that are really feared by the keepers of a menagerie are the elephant and the leopard, the former from his uncertain temper and the latter because of his perpetually-treacherous nature.

SECRET OF A FAKIR'S RESURRECTION.

THE MYSTERY OF A BURIED HINDOO, WHO REAP PEARED WITHOUT DISTURBING HIS GRAVE.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.1

"It was on the way from Punnah to Bewah, in Southern India," said the bronze-faced man. "Our party had just reached the dark bungalow about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and found assembled there near a large banyan tree a number of fakirs. Their tricks were more than usually clever, and they kept us amused for a considerable time. Finally, as a parting stroke, they suggested that for a small sum of money one of their party should be buried alive. Our curiosity was not proof against such a tempting offer, and the rascals set to work.

It did not take them long to make an excavation from seven to eight feet in length, and two and a half feet wide at the top. When they got down about four feet they suddenly narrowed the grave to a width of two feet, leaving an even margin or ledge all around. Below this they dug some two feet further, making a total depth of six feet.

A slim, wiry-looking chap, with a cast in his left eye, was selected as the victim. The chief fakir, with the usual incantations and passes, soon had him rigid in a sort of hypnotic sleep; then wrapping him loosely in a white cloth, he was lowered into the narrow part of the grave. Over him, resting upon the sandy ledge described, was placed a layer of thin boards to prevent the soil from coming in contact with his body. This done, the others set to work with a will to shovel in, trampling down the earth solidly every few inches.

"I must confess that by this time I felt a trifle qualmish. The scene was rather too realistic for my fancy. Could it be deliberate murder, and I an accessory to the act? A sickly feeling crept over me, but the Hindoos, noticing my uneasy looks, only ground and shoveled and stamped the harder. In about fifteen minutes they had smoothed over a neat mound and afterward sodded it evenly down.

"This was surely no common conjuring trick, and try as I might, I could not shake off the uncomfortable feeling that the Hindoo had been laid away for his final sleep. I succeeded, however, in repressing my emotions, and assumed an indifferent air I was far from feeling.

"How long will you leave the man there?' I feebly managed to ask, after a time.

"As long as sahib pleases,' replied the chief fakir.

"I would have ordered him resurrected then and there, but the others of my party were not equally chicken-hearted, and so the following morning was fixed upon for the disinterment.

"In turns we watched the grave during the night, and next morning I was about to leave my quarters for the place at about 9 o'clock. A light hand tapped me upon the shoulder. I turned quickly, and to my unuterable amazement, who should confront me, grinning and bowing and scraping, with his 'Salaam, sahib, baksheesh,' but that long wiry rascal with the cast in his left eye, the same whom the night before I had left securely planted beneath six feet of compact earth. It would have been bad policy to show astonishment so I simply nodded and passed on with him to the grave. There it remained, not a sod disturbed, and one of my companions standing by still on guard duty.

grave. There it remained, not a sod disturbed, and one of my companions standing by, still on guard duty. It was a resurrection, sure enough.

"It cost me just 50 rupees to worm the mystery out of that wily fakir," the bronzed-faced man went on, "but I was bound to know if it had cost me 100. There was, as I said, a large banyan tree close by the grave. That tree was hollow. Between it and one end of the That tree was hollow. Between it and one end of the tomb was a subterranean passage just big enough for a thin man to creep in. supposed to live to a very great age, and the following records appear to be authentic: Raven, 60; gray parrot, 50 and 40; blue macaw, 64; eagle owls, 53, and one still alive at 68. Some aquatic birds appear to live to a ripe old age, for we hear of a heron of 60, goose 80, mute swan 70. It is doubtful whether any of the foremute swan 70. It is doubtful whether any of the foregoing ages are any true guide as to the longevity of the actual families the birds represent, or, indeed, whether the possible age of one family exceeds that of another, but the records are interesting, and form a step in the ladder of investigation of this most difficult question. The colorings of a bird in perfect health and the texture of its feathers are exactly the same at 50 as at 5, and those signs that are popularly put down to age, such as bleached and faded plumage and misshapen claws or beaks are attributable to unnatural conditions of some kind. The great tenacity of life some birds possess when deprived of food is marvelous, and the following instances are given: Golden eagle, 21 days; an elder duck, 28; an albatross, 35, and a penguin (Aptene dytes) it is stated, can live two months. GO VERNMENTS OF THE WORLD OF TODAY.

IX.-CANADA.

BY J. ROY PERRY, M.A.

HE system of government established in Canada under the act of 1867, which confederated the North American possessions of Great Britain, is that of a federal union-the first of its kind in the British Empire. There is a central government, which controls all matters essential to the general development and unity of the whole dominion, and a number of provincial governments having control and management of certain local matters conveniently falling within their governments having control and management of certain local matters conveniently falling within their jurisdiction. Contrary to the usually accepted idea of the servient position of a "colony," the dominion independently exercises the largest possible rights of legislating on all matters of importance to the confederation generally, without interference from England. The position of Canada is, in fact, that of a semi-independent power. It is true that the Governor-General is apparently an official of the English government, but he can only act on the advice of his Canadian advisers; and, so far as active government is concerned, his position is that of a mere spectator. It is also true that the British crown has a right to veto acts of the Canadian Parliament within two years after their passage, if it sees fit to do so, but the exercise of such right is extremely rare, and has never yet proved irksome. Copies of all acts are forwarded to England, and the imperial government frequently points out errors, defects, omissions, etc., with a view to their being remedied, but is a very different thing from a veto.

The government of Canada may be

1.-The Federal Government.

A. Executive Branch.—The seat of government is fixed at Ottawa until the Queen otherwise directs. The chief executive authority is nominally vested in the Queen, in whom also is vested the chief command of the militia and of all military and naval forces of the dominion. Her Majesty is represented by a Governor-General, appointed by the British government for a period of five years, at a salary of $50,000 per year, by the people of Canada. The Governor's position must not be misunderstood. He is not a Viceroy, and possesses no independent and scarcely and discretionary power. He is bound strictly by the terms of his commission, which are narrow, and can only exercise such authority as is expressly intrusted to him therein. He governs under the narrow, and can only exercise such authority as is expressly intrusted to him therein. He governs under the advice of a council or ministry known as the privy council of Canada, and he is not at liberty to be present at the sittings of this body.

The active ministry or Cabinet, as it is popularly called, consists at present of eighteen members, each of whom has charge of some one particular branch of the administration, such as finance, customs, militia, public lar branch of the administration, such as finance, customs, militia, public works, etc. The members of the Cabinet must be members either of the House of Commons or the Senate. They are chosen as follows: After a general election the Governor-General summons the acknowledged leader of the political party—Liberal or Conservative—which has been successful at the polls. This leader, known as the Premier, then selects from his own party the men whom he desires to assist him in the administration, and in doing so, it might be added, he generally gives due consideration to the claims of each province to be represented in the ministry. The Cabinet so formed is responsible to the House of Commons, not only for all expenditure. so formed is responsible to the House of Commons, not only for all expenditure, but also for its tenure of office; for, should a majority of the members of the House of Commons censure by yote any act of the Cabinet, the latter body is obliged to resign. It will be clear, therefore, that should the people designs a change of white the state. desire a change of ministry, it is only necessary for them to elect a suffi-

recessary for them to elect a sufficient number of members of the opposite party to out vote the ministry in the House of Commons. Nominally, the Governor-General, as the acting head of the executive, summons, dissolves and prorogues Parliament, ecutive, summons, dissolves and prorogues Parliament, and assents to and reserves bills in the name of the Queen, but, as a matter of fact, in the discharge of these and all other executive duties he acts entirely by and with the advice of his council, even in matters of imperial concern affecting Canada. He consults with his council and submits their views to the authorities in England, where, as a rule, they are acceded to.

B. Legislative Branch.—Following the British model closely, the Parliament of Canada consists of:

(1.) The Queen, represented by Governor-General.

(2.) An upper house, called the Senate:

(3.) A lower house, styled House of Commons.

The consent of all three bodies is necessary before

ture are as limited as in the executive. He has only a negative voice as regards legislation, and can neither negative voice as regards legislation, and can neither originate any measure nor exercise any other independent legislative power. His international duties are not great, as the dominion cannot make war or peace, nor conclude treaties (excepting commercial,) and he neither sends nor receives Ambassadors.

Two, The Senate.—At present consists of 31 members, 24 each from Ontario and Quebec, 10 each from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, 4 each from Prince Edward Island and Manitoba, 3 from British Columbia, and 2 from the Northwest Territories. Senators are styled honorable, are appointed for life by the Governor-General, upon the recommendation of his council, must possess property worth $4000, be 30 years of age, and reside in the province which they represent. They are paid $1000 per annum. Bills can originate in the Senate, excepting money or revenue bills, in which cases the action—a rejection justified only by extraordinary circumstances. The Senate is supposed to constitute a wise check on hasty legislation, but, as a matter of fact, it check on hasty legislation, but, as a matter of fact, it has proved of little assistance in the government of the country, and at present there is agitation in quarters for its abolition.

House of Commons.-Consists of 215 1 e'ected for a five-year term. Ontario has 92 Representatives, Quebec 65, Nova Scotia 20, New Brunswick 14. Manitoba 7. British Columbia 6. Prince Edward Isl. 5, territories 4. The representation is arranged each decennial census, the basis being that Quebed after each decennial census, the basis being that Quebec shall always have 65 members, and each of the other provinces such a number as will give them the same proportion of representation to the population as the number 65 bears to the population of Quebec. Members of Parliament require no property qualification. They are paid $10 per day during seasion, with a maximum annual payment of $1000. Their sittings are annual, but may be oftener. They are elected by ballot, under a franchise which is manhood suffrage.

Debates and proceedings of Parliament may be carried on either in French or English.

Distribution of Powers

on either in French or English.

Distribution of Powers.

The Parliament of Canada, above described, is by the act of union, 1867, invested with exclusive legislative authority over twenty-eight classes of subjects, therein expressly stated. These include the raising of money by taxation or loan, the census, fisheries, currency and coinage, weights and measures, bankruptcy and insolvency, patents, copyright, Indian tribes, public debt and property, regulation of trade and commerce, postal service, militia and defense, navigation and shipping, marriage and divorce, criminal law, etc. The act also enumerates sixteen classes of subjects, more or less of a local nature, with which the legislatures of the various provinces may exclusively deal—for example, taxation for provincial purposes, management of lands of the provinces, prisons, hospitals, asylums, licenses, municipal institutions, etc. Again, there are certain matters which the dominion and local governments may deal with in common, among which are public health, agriculture and immigration. Finally, the federal government has control over all matters which are not by the act exclusively assigned to the legislatures of the province. This is remarkably different from the distribution of powers in the United States, where all powers not delegated by the Coastitution to the Federal government, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

-Provincial Governmans.

2.—Provincial Governments.

The governments of the seven provinces are closely modeled after that of the Federal government as to the Constitution of the executive and legislature, the practice of responsible government and the rules and procedure of Parliament. All the provinces have the power to amend their Constitutions except as regards the office of Lieutenant-Governor. The machinery of the system of local self-government, which obtains in the provinces, is as follows:

(1.) A Lieutenant-Governor appointed by the Governor-General in council, holding office during pleasure, but not removable within five years from appointment, except for sufficient assigned causes. He is, therefore, an officer of the dominion, as well as the head of the provincial executive. He appoints his executive council and is guided by their advice so long as they retain the confidence of the local legislature. The Lieutenant-Governors have the power to "reserve," also to "veto" a bill when it comes before them. Their salaries, paid by the dominion, vary from $7000 to $10,000.

(2.) An executive, or advisory council, is responsible to the legislature, which council varies in the number of its members in the several provinces, Ontario and Quebec having 8 each, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick 7 each, Manitoba and British Columbia 5 each, and Prince Edward Island 6. The council is headed by a Premier and performs the same functions in regard to provincial matters as does the Federal Cabinet in regard to dominion affairs.

(3.) A legislature, in all cases consisting of an elective house with the add##fon, in Quebec and Nova Scotia gard to dominion affairs.

(3.) A legislature, in all cases consisting of an elective house with the addition, in Quebec and Nova Scotia only, of an upper chamber appointed by the crown. The legislatures have a duration of four years (Quebec five unless sooner dissolved by the Lieutenant-Governor.) They are governed by the constitutional principles which obtain in the general goernment at Ottawa.

3.—Territorial Government.

3.—Territorial Government.

The Northwest territories—Alberta, Athabasca, Saskatchewan and Assiniboia—were at first under the administration of the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba. In 1888 they were given a Lieutenant-Governor and an elective assembly. In 1890 the Federal Parliament provided for the adoption of responsible government. They have now all the powers of provinces, except that they cannot raise money by loan.

cannot raise money by loan.

The Yukon district is government and directly under its control. The unorganized districts of Keewatin and Labrador are also under the immediate direction of the Federal government.

FAVORITE BOOKS OF GREAT MEN.

[Literature:] Lord Byron's great favorites were Burton's "Anatomy of Melancholy," Disraeli's "Illustrations of Literary Charaters," and Scott's novels. Pope tells us "Don Quixote" was the favorite of Lord Orford. He advised Rowe to learn Spanish, and the latter, thinking an appointment in that country awaited him, did so, when His Lordship on hearing this said:
"Sir, I envy you the pleasure of realing 'Don Quixote' in its original language." Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, it is said, was so fond of De Thou's history that he actually resigned the seals on purpose to read it at his leisure. Baker's "Medulla Poetarum Romanorum" was the favorite book of Sir William Jones when a boy at Harrow. The book loves of many royal personages have been transmitted to us. Alexander the Great loved Homer; Antoninus Caracella, Oppian, Henry VIII, the "De Civitate Dei;" Anne Boleyn, "The Parable of the Wicked Mammon;" Queen Elizabeth, Demosthenes; Catharine of Russia, "The Death of Abel;" Charles I, subordinated all to a love for Shakespeare. "Twelfth Night" was the play he admired most, him, did so, when His Lordship on hearing this said:

THE MORNING SERMON.

INDEPENDENCE DAY DISCOURSE.

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D., Pastor of the First Methodist Church, Cleveland, O.

There were giants in the earth in those days."-[Gen. vi, 4. THERE are giants on earth yet; but they change their type with every succeeding age. The giants of the book of Genesis, and those later giants that scared the spies in the Promised Land into feeling like grasshoppers, would be only freaks in a dime museum in our day. It has been well said that an age may be judged by its heroes. The idols of popular enthusiasm of any time are thermometers of the civilization and of the character of the people of that day. With that thought in view, I am sure it will be interesting to note the peculiar types of heroism that have attracted the special attention of this country, and, in-deed, the whole world, during the recent Spanish-American war.

American war.

First among them is Dewey, the naval hero. But how different the type from the old ideal! The drunken, swearing bully of ancient naval history and fiction has no chance for a footing in the picture of this modern hero of the seas. Instead, you have an unassuming, straightforward gentleman; no bluster, no bravado, no self-assertion. Everything that has been told us about the battle itself has portrayed to the gaze of the world a quiet man, who thought out his plan, and followed it steadfastly to the end, until every ship of the enemy was sunk or destroyed, in as calm and gentlemanly a way as a college professor would conduct his classes, or a bank president preside at an annual meeting.

And the year that has passed since has not robbed Dewey of one laurel, but has added them month by month. Fame and adulation have not turned his head. They have not changed his estimate of his own ability or character. He has had the good sense to know that George Dewey, the naval hero, has not, through sinking a Spanish fleet, suddenly gained any proper equipment to write a history or be President, which he did not have before. There he stands—the methodical, gentlemanly, cool, brave man; ready for all emergencies, and dealing with them as they arise with calmness and composure. Put him alongside of Nelson, and Perry, and Farragut—all glorious in their way—and you will see that George Dewey is a new type, but his laurel wreath does not fade in their presence.

Again, Hobson's heroism will stand out clear and bright as long as men love heroic acts. Here you have a youth of intelligence and character deliberately setting out to do a brave deed for the sake of his country, under very unique and peculiar circumstances. It is one thing to face hostile guns when your own are hurling thunderbolts in return. It is quite another to deliberately steam your ship into the mouth of the enemy's harbor, knowing that you will be the center of the fire; knowing that, with all this hall about of the fire of her fleet and forts, with no power to re-turn the fire; knowing that, with all this hall about you, you are to sink your own ship under your feet to take the chances not only of being shot, but escaping that and the explosion of your own torpedoes, to face the almost certainty of drowning afterward. And all this that the enemy's ships may be shut in, and your country's flag may go on to victory! History has not recorded many a more splendid deed of heroism than that!

It is worth while to notice that this was not a piece

It is worth while to notice that this was not a piece of recklessness, but a deliberately wrought-out plan; not conceived by a rash enthusiast, but by a keen-brained, educated, big-hearted Christian man, Myho was young and full of life, and who had everything to live for. It was the heroism that feels that life in its blossom, and at its best, is not worth the having unless accompanied with that noblest honor which file every opportunity up to the fullest measure.

But we shall not lack for heroes if we turn to the land. Where in all history has there been a more picturesque career than Roosevelt's? Take him from the time he graduated from Harvard College, the pride of an old, aristocratic and wealthy family. Follow his story as a rancher on the great western prairies, go with him into the mountain cafions, hunting for bear; then in his fight for civil-service reform against politicians more fierce and vindictive than the grizzlies of the Rockies; see him taking his days of recreation in writing books of travel and adventure, as well as strong volumes of history; stand by him while he pauses at the call of duty to forsake adventure, or the ease in his library, or the delightful associations of the man of wealth and culture, to take the head of the police department of the great metropolis of his native land; watch him as with steady grip and buildog tenacity he fights politicians, saloon-keepers and gamblers.

Then his keen intuition scents from afar the rumbling of the war that is to come. He sees the need of a better equipped navy, a navy whose persannel is awake and alert and practiced; and he thrusts everything aside to become Assistant Secretary of the Navy, where he may have the opportunity of getting the country ready for the great struggle that is before it. His keen appreciation suggests that George Dewey be sent to take charge of our fleet in the East. He asks for $1,000,000 worth of ammunition, and sets the sailors to shooting at targets; and when it was all fired away he asks for half a million more. Asked what he had done with the other, he said, "We have shot it all off at practicing." "What are you going to do with this?" "Explode it in the same way," he answered, with a smile. It looked wasteful; but when Dewey sunk the Spanish fleet at Manila, and Sampson and Schley sent Cervera's fleet to the bottom at Santiago, without the loss of a ship and scarcely the loss of a man, the wisdom of Roosevelt had its vindication.

When all had been done that could be done by way of preparation, Roosevelt resigned, against the advice of the President and Secretary of the Navy and all the wise newspaper editors. Then he began to gather together a regiment of spirits like his own. Indian fighters and hampy, daring riders from the far West, the heroes of football teams and college rowing matches, and athletes from the homes of culture and refinement is the East. Offered the coloneley, he decimed it, that his friend, Dr. Wood, a man he knew could lead and master the regiment he had gathered, might be put at the head, while he went to assist and learn as lieutenant-colonel. I cannot follow the story into all its details, but all the world knows it, how he slept in the open with his troopers, ate their hard tack and spoiled meat with them, bought food for them with his own money when they were hungry, led them ever in the van of the army, gaining deathless glory on the battlefield, until the war was done.

Then, when hundreds of soldiers all about were dying of disease, and the new necessity was to get the troops away to the North, where they might regain their health, it was Roosevelt who dared to break through all the red tape and write the letter which aroused the country, and which though it brought en him for the moment harshest criticisms, induced action and saved the lives of hundreds and possibly thousands of men. At home again, new duties arise, and today the cry goes out over the land that he, and not the political bosses, is Governor of the great Empire State.

There is enother two of hypersym which this war hear

State.

There is another type of heroism which this war has illustrated in a peculiar way—a type of the hero outside of the army and yet related to it. Such men as the newspaper correspondents who kept with the advancing columns on the firing line, who were wounded again and again, and who wrote reports of battles in what they supposed were their dying moments. Surely the spirit of ancient chivalry had in it something akin to the light-hearted audacity, mingled with a certain sublime fearlessness of death, and a soleman sense of responsibility to duty, found in such spirits as Creedman, and Crane, and Marshall, and Davis, and a dozen others who might be named.

Along with these one might note such men as George E. Waring, who had purified the streets and the atmos-

L. Waring, who had purified the streets and the atmosphere of New York City in the days when Theodore Roosevelt was cleansing the police force. Col. Waring went to Havana, and, risking his life every hour of the day, searchedt ou its hidden recesses of filth and planned and reported how it might be made a safe place in which to live. He did that, and died with the fever contracted in the work. So good a judge as Kipling says that no deed of the war will compare with Waring's as a specimen of the noblest heroism. This is a sort of heroism that comes close home to us all. The approximity for such heroism is within the reach of opportunity for such heroism is within the reach of opportunity for such heroism is within the reach of every one of us. To do one's duty in his place—to stand steadfastly by the kitchen stove, or the black-smith's anvil, or the nozzle of the fireman's hose, and do one's duty honestly, faithfully, ideally—that is always heroic smiths antit, of the lozzie of the inemans nose, and do one's duty honestly, faithfully, ideally—that is always heroic.

A single other type of heroism must hold our attention. I give you the name of Helen Gould. Multitudes of noble women have wrought and toiled and sacrificed, but she is the woman who has caught the eye of the world, and whose name will remain as peculiarly the heroine of the Spanish-American war. It was not only that she gave money, but that she gave herself with her money. It was a fine act, to give $100,000 to furnish substitutes to fight in her place; it was fine to send a shipload of lemons and carloads of delicacies to feed the sick and the wounded; but when Helen Gould, the many times millionaire, left her luxurious home and went to the camps, and gave herself to minister to the sick and the dying, she captured the heart of America and of the world—an example of the possible heroism of the woman with large wealth who holds herself to be the trustee of Jesus Christ, and who administers her wealth in such a way as to soften the hard lof of the poor and the weak and make a brighter outlook for the orphaned and the destitute.

New I know that, in these types of heroism, where I have spoken of one there are thousands as deserving of mentiton. I am in the situation of the writer of the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, In that wonderful chapter, which has been well termed "the roll-call of the heroes of faith," the writer starts out as though he intended to name them all; but finally exclaims: "The time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and Barak, and Samuel, and Jephthah; of David and Samuel and the prophets," and he concludes by saying that there were multitudes of others, unnamed "of whom the world was not worthy"

So today. Back of Dewey and Hobson are Gridley not worthy

not worthy"

So today. Back of Dewey and Hobson are Gridley and Sampson and Schley and Philip and Evans, and the multitude of others as true and as noble in their heroism—even to "the men behind the guns" and the stokers in the hold. Back of Roosevelt are a host of young men of culture and wealth and lelsure, who followed him and inspired him by their courage, and many of whom died for the flag. Back of Helen Gould' are hundreds of Sisters of Charity, deaconesses and nurses from town and country and city, who in camp and hospital gave themselves with unsparing self-sacrifice to solace the sick and the dying.

But God keeps count of them all, and it only remains for us to catch their spirit, and seek amid the daily struggles of life to show forth the same noble heroism which inspired them.

HOW THEY RAISE MEN IN GEORGIA.

[Philadelphia Post:] During a recent visit to the army camp in Savannah, Gen. Joseph Wheeler was entertained by a party of northern men at the De Soto, when, in the good humor of after-dinner cigars, one of the gentlemen said, laughingly:

"How is it, general, that the sleepy farms of the South produce afth whirlwind fighters in such small packages?"

South produce sich whirlwind fighters in such small packages?"

"Well, general," said the little general, puffing at a large man's cigar, "I believe I'll have to give you the answer an old 'cracker' woman once gave me when I asked her a similar question. Not many years ago I had occasion to make a saddle journey through the pine barrens of Georgia, where most everybody is a 'cracker' and mighty shiftless. One day, however, I rode into a little community that showed such signs of thrift as to be quite out of keeping with the general character of the barrens, I do assure you, gentlemen. I rode up to a cabin where a gaunt old woman stood in the doorway, and asked her who owned these little farms that were so well kept.

"That farm on the left belongs to my son Jabez,' said she, 'and the next one to my boy Zalim, and the next to my lad Jason, and the next is my boy Potiphar's place, and—"'Hold on, sister,' said I. 'How did you manage to "'Hold on, sister,' said I. 'How did you manage to raise such a fine lot of boys way off here in the woods?'

"'Wal, stranger,' she answered, 'I am a widdy woman, and all I had to raise 'em on was prayer and hickory, but I raised 'em powerful frequent.'

Mrs. Charles Havemeyer, wife of the sugar magnate, is, feature for feature, an exact counterpart of the beautiful Duchess of Portland, and Lady Curzen, Vicerine of India, is the double of the Empress of Russia.

LAY SERMONS,

H, HOW weary and heavy laden we grow sometimes with the cares of earth. We long for rest, for peace. But do what we may we cannot lighten our burden. It still clings to us, until we remember that we have a blessed Burden Bearer, and find our way to His cross. How quickly then is our burden unloosed and it rolls from our sight, and we go on joyous and full of hope. If we could only remember at all times, that not a care of our life, not a burden of sorrow, or doubt, or fear, but Christ is ready to take from us through the blessed hand of trust and faith, we us through the blessed hand of trust and faith, we should not go on so heavy laden. If we would only listen we should hear, coming down to us through all our nights of sorrow and care, the voice of our divine Helper saying, "All things shall work together for good to them who love God." With that assurance, how quickly light breaks through the gloom, and the songs of Hope are sweeter than the voice of birds.

"All things," that is the promise of One whose assurances never fail, and who knows all our needs. The love of God is beyond our estimating because it is be-

"All things," that is the promise of One whose assurances never fail, and who knows all our needs. The love of God is beyond our estimating, because it is beyond measure, and as boundless as His own infinite nature. Do you think because the earthly father sometimes punishes his wayward child that he does not love him? Rather is it not an evidence of his love and care for him that he does sometimes rebuke and punish him? And so it is with our Heavenly Father, He sees that we sometimes need restraint and correction that we may not lose ourselves in folly and the love of this world. We need chastening sometimes, too, that we may be led to look into our own hearts and see just where we stand in relation to God. I have known people whose lives had always moved on smoothly, with no cares to darken their skies, no sorrows to trouble their lives, who thought, "Oh, we can trust God, it is all right between us and our Maker." But heavy, trials came and bitter bereavements, then they at first grew rebellious and distrustful and seemed to lose their hold of the Father's hand. But some of them, out of this awful deep of rebellion and distrust came into the clear shining of God's love, and blessed Him that He had led them through the paths of sorrow to a better knowledge of their own hearts, and a more trusting faith in His eternal goodness. Thus they could see His guiding hand in all things and thank Him that He had not left them in joyous prosperity to walk in blindness, content with the good things of this world.

Oh, more worth to us, dear reader, is an hour of heaven than centuries on earth. Let us resign ourselves to God's will, and be fully willing to be led by Him. Let us remember that "The Lord loveth whom He chasteneth." and never doubt His tender care for us, because we are sometimes made to know sorrow.

My Father to Thyself myself I give.

And in the fullness of my trust I live,

My Father to Thyself myself I give, And in the fullness of my trust I live, To do Thy will and know no will but Thine, Praying that it may be forever mine.

THE SILENT MEN OF CONGRESS.

[Washington Letter:] One of the ablest men who have been in Congress during this generation is John K. Cowen of Maryland. He is the president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and one of the ablest men in timore and Ohio Rallroad, and one of the ablest men in all America. He was a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and he never made a speech, long or short, during his term. He never said: "Mr. Speaker," never said: "Mr. Chairman." And yet there was not a member of the House who could make a better speech than he. He looks the superior man, and his career shows that it is not in the walks of statesmanship, but in the walks of business that we find our great fine. I never heard Mr. Cowen speak, but I once read a speech he made in Baltimore, and it was one of the finest speeches I ever read. I sat in the gallery day after day during the life of the Fifty-fourth Congress hoping that he would address the House, but was always disappointed. If he had loved to speak, as do the Hon. Sulzer, the Hon. Gaines and the Hon. Lentz, the Congressional Record of the Fifty-fourth Congress would afford some good reading. good reading Another silent Congressman is John K. Ketcham of New York. There is but one member of the House who was here before him, and that is Father Grow, who was here nearly fifty years ago. Mr. Ketcham first came to Congress in 1865, and has been a member of the House most of the time since. He is almost totally deaf and how he manages to vote on a roll call is a mystery, but he always votes when present. He has served in thirteen Congresses, and so far as I know has never made a speech. He is said to be a very superior business man, and it is altogether probable that he is here to protect some New York interests. He is from Dutchess county, and I guess Dutchess has an iron or so in the fire.

Yet another silent member is James Jerome Belden of Syracuse—"Uncle Jimmy," as they call him at home. It would not be extravagant to say that "Uncle Jimmy" made James A. Garfield President of the United States. It was not "Old Salt"—as they called Alvord—it was not Robertson; it was not Lo Sessions, who collared Roscoe Conkling in the convention of 1880 and tore from him those nineteen votes, thereby defeating Grant. It was Belden. He looks all the strong character he is. He looks like I imagine a country gentleman in one of Colly. Cibber's plays looked. He looks just like Squire Western would have looked when sober, if he ever was sober. He is reputed to be enormously wealthy and comes to Congress just because it is his whim to take a whirl in politics, now and then.

GENIUS COMES TO WOMAN'S RELIEF.

Genious has finally came to the relief of the woman who operates her own sewing machine. To alleviate that tired feeling is a little contrivance which has just made its appearance on the market. It is an electric device to be attached to a sewing machine, and it tric device to be attached to a sewing machine, and it not only relieves the operator from exhausting treadle work, but works a revolving fan as well. In fact, it can be used for cooling the torrid air independent of the sewing machine. The speed of the motor is regulated at will and can be started or stopped by the pressure of the foot on the treadle. The motor is small and can be operated by the current from any incandescent light circuit or from a battery. The fan attachment was intended originally for South American trade, but will find favor in the home market. The cost of operating the contrivance is about 1 per cent. per hour. The outfit is portable and its cost is reasonable.

The Development of the Southwest

IN THE FIELDS OF INDUSTRY, CAPITAL AND PRODUCTION.

Compiled for The Times.

IThe Times will be pleased to receive and publish in this department brief, plainly-written articles, giving trustworthy information regarding important developments in Southern Callfornia, and adjoining territory, such articles to be confined to actual work in operation, or about to begin, excluding rumors and contemplated enterprises.

Water Development at Long Beach,

THE Long Beach Development Company has com menced construction on a new plant which will very much increase the water service in Long Beach. The company at present has on its water-bearing lands north of town three artesian wells, from which is flowing about fifty-five miners' inches of water. The wells are seven inches in diameter, and extend about three hundred and fifty feet into the ground. The company is about to sink a 10-inch well in the same neighborhood to a depth of about six hundred and fifty feet. A steam pumping plant with oil-burning engines will be installed to raise the water above where it naturally flows from the well. An air-compressing plant is to be used in order to raise the flow from the three wells now in use. From the new well it is hoped to get 400 inches of water. Adjacent to the wells will be built a reservoir of 900,000 gallons capacity, and the steam pumping plant is to be sufficient to more than fill the reservoir every day. The water in the reservoir will be 110 feet above the highest street level in Long Beach. Part of an order of 18,000 feet of 8-inch pipe and 20,000 feet of 4-inch pipe has been received. The piping is of cast iron. The reservoir will be of cement concrete. The cost of the improvements to be installed by the company is estimated at $35,000 or more. Charles D. Martin, traveling engineer for the company, is on the ground cooperating with the local engineers in the work. A controlling interest in the company is owned by the Crocker Estate Company of San Francisco.

Competition in domestic water service in Long Beach seems to be assured, for the Bouton Water Company is about to extend a 30-inch main of water under good pressure into that town also.

Mineral Waters.

HE Ice and Cold Storage Company of Los Angeles, which has built up a large trade in distilled water, is branching out, having recently purchased a complete and modern plant for the carbonating of mineral waters and non-alcoholic beverages. The company manufactures its own gas, from the best quality of bi-carbonate of soda, thus fasuring a pure product A patent cork is used, which is cleanly, and easily opened. A sterilizing room has been built, in which the bottles and corks, after being thoroughly washed, are sterilized at a temperature of 212 deg. This is said to be a feature employed by no other concern on the Pa-

The water will be put up in pints, quarts and siphons. The mineral waters are as follows:

Pure distilled water, Puralaris, containing the same mineral salts as the imported Apollinaris water; Puritas Lithia, containing thirty-five grains of pure carbonate of lithia per gallon; Puritas Vichy; Puritas Seltzer, and Puritas Kissingen. These waters are claimed to show the same analyses as the original spring waters, being made from pure distilled water as a base, containing absolutely no organic matter.

The company is also making an exceptionally fine brand of ginger ale in two grades. This is declared by many to be superior to the well-known Belfast article. Puritas Root Beer is another beverage which is being made from distilled water and extracts of aromatic fruits and herbs. Other drinks will be added, from time to time, as a demand may arise for them. A large amount of money will thus be kept at home, which has hitherto been sent out of the city.

The company invites medical men and the public in general to visit its plant and inspect the processes of manufacture.

San Pedro Oil Possibilities.

S MENTIONED in this department last week, the people of San Pedro are still figuring on the possibility of developing oil there, in spite of the lack of success which has hitherto attended exploration work in this direction. The San Pedro paper recently published an article on the subject, in which reference ade to sanguine predictions of Prof. W. L. Watts of the State Mining Bureau, who made an investigation of the San Pedro peninsula. The Times forwarded a copy of this article to Mr. Watts, with the request that he state whether he had been correctly quoted. In reply, Mr. Watts writes to The Times as follows:

"Yours of June 20 to hand, with interesting article "Yours of June 20 to hand, with interesting article relative to the prospects of oil at San Pedro. In response to your request for data concerning the geological formation of San Pedro peninsula, I send herewith some abstracts from my notes, which the State Mineralogist is very pleased that you should have, his desire being to publish such facts as we may gather through any appropriate channel. Concerning the outlook for oil at San Pedro, I will say that while I regard the shale formation at San Pedro as belonging to the same geological horizon as the shale seen in the Puente Hills, I saw no body of oil sand, except the bituminous sandstones at Point Firmin, and the only petroleum seepages I saw were of asphaltum.

"Wells that are drilled where no definite stratum of oil sand has been discovered, and simply because the formation to be tested shows irregular seepages of petroleum, or because it appears to be a similar formation to that containing remunerative oil yielding strata in othe places, are 'wild-eat' wells, and although 'wild-cat' wells are sometimes successful, no one should risk therein more than they can well afford to lose."

Following is the article on the geological formation

Following is the article on the geological formation

Following is the article on the geological formation of San Pedro peninsula referred to by Mr. Watts:

"The peninsula of San Pedro comprises an area of about twelve square miles. On the west it is bounded by the coast line, extending from Point Vincent to Point Firmin, and on the east by the coast line between Point Firmin and the town of San Pedro. From the sea shore the, land rises toward the interior of the peninsula, showing a series of marine terraces and culminating in the summit of Mount San Pedro (i. e., San Pedro station,) at an altitude of 1482 feet.

"Throughout the greater portion of the peninsula the exposed rocks consist of slates or shales, transversed by numerous calcareous, or silicious strata, and in places being impregnated with heavy petroleum. The slates, or shales, are for the most part bleached to a whitish or yellowish color, and form a great portion of the coast line. Near the town of San Pedro the whitish slate, or shale, gives place to a tough clayey formation, which is more or less bituminous in places.

"In the upper portion of the whitish slate formation there are numerous strata of diatomaceous earth, and in some places the diatomaceous strata appear to rest non-conformably on the strata beneath them. The diatomaceous rocks can be well observed in the foothills west of the town of San Pedro, a'so along the northwest portion of the crest of the main ridge of the San Pedro Mountain. At the extremity of the peninsula, i. e., Point Firmin, there are bituminous sandstones. At San Pedro the rocks of most recent formation are a series of soft sandstones, which rest non-conformably on the underlying formations. These soft sandstones are well exposed near the town of San Pedro and on Dead Man's Island. They contain numerous fassils of quaternary age. All the before mentioned formations probably rest non-conformably on metamorphic rock formation are a few boulders made up of comminuted mica slates. Extending through the heart of San Pedro Mountain is a mass of eruptive rocks. On the rosh fo places. On the coast line west of Portuguese Bend, calcareous strata overlie eruptive rocks. On the north slope of San Pedro Mountain, the whitish shale is interstratified with eruptive rock.

"From the foregoing it appears that although bituminous shales, which resemble the shale seen in the Puente Hills, are exposed on the peninsula of San Pedro, with the exception of the bituminous sands at Point Firmin, no definite body of oil sand was observed by the writer and the stratagraphy of the shale is irregular and broken.

"The rocks throughout many portions of the San by the writer and the stratagraphy of the shale is Irregular and broken.

"The rocks throughout many portions of the San Pedro peninsula show metamorphism and are disturbed by the intrusion of igneous rocks. These features, together with the broken character of the formation in general, bespeak conditions favorable to natural distiliation, by which the lighter petroleums may have been driven from the bituminous shales and underlying rocks. This view of the case is strengthened by the fact that the only seepage of petroleum seen in the shale formation is of a very heavy kind, being practically asphaltum, and that the sandstone formation which overlies the whitish shales at Point Firmin, is impregnated with petroleum. It is possibe that if the bituminous sandstone which is exposed at Point Firmin could be struck at a depth of more than 500 feet, it might be found to yield oil in valuable quantities. Unfortunately, only a remnant of the sandstone is exposed, and the strike of the formation shows that its only extension lies beneath the formation shows that its only extension lies beneath "The rocks forming the north slope of the San Pedro Mountain appear to be somewhat less disturbed than those exposed in other portions of the San Pedro peninsula, and if the sandstone impregnated with petroleum similar to that seen at Point Firmin could be found in the foothills north of San Pedro Mountain, it would be worth while testing it by a prospect well. Unfortunately the north foothills of the San Pedro peninsula are so covered with alluvium that rock exposures are of rare occurrence and the few rocks observed by the writer consist of soft, sandy formations, showing no evidence of petroleum.

"At San Pedro two wells have been drilled to prospect for oil. One of the wells was drilled in 1895 by the San Pedro Oil Company. The record of this well shows: The rocks forming the north slope of the San Pedro Logan Berries.

HE acreage in Southern California which is this year producing the Logan berry, that has come to be common at the fruit stands, is said not to exceed ten or twelve acres. Most of that area is between Elysian Park and the river, in control of one firm, although there is plenty of land elsewhere on which the berries may be raised. A considerable acreage is at present occupied with the first year's growth of the plants, and will be in bearing next year. The Logan berry is large, long and dark red. It combines the flavor of the field blackberry and the red raspberry. It is a very palatable fruit when prepared for the table in any of the ways in which blackberries are served, but its delicious qualities seem to be most superlatively developed when it is made into pies.

Growth of a Sugar Town

T BECOMES more evident, from day to day, that Oxnard, in Ventura county, is to become a city of considerable importance. The Ventura Signal says: "The big Patterson ranch, one of the finest in the world, is being cut up and sold off in five and fifty-acre tracts to beet farmers, and J. G. Hill, it is understood, will sell off his fine ranch in the same way. The purchaser of a tract is given the privilege of paying for the land with the crop. The Oxnard people are looking ahead to a thickly-settled neighborhood because of this movement in land.

"There are whispers of movements in other directions that will vastly benefit both Oxnard and Hueneme and all that section of the county, if but brought to a head. That is the shipment of raw sugar to Hueneme to be refined at Oxnard. In this way the big factory can be kept in operation as a refinery at such times as it is not being used as a beet-sugar refinery.

"There is also talk of an electric road from Oxnard to Hueneme, in place of the steam road, for which a franchise has already been granted."

Water for Riverside,

T IS a sight for distressed optics, to drive out just east of San Bernardino and see the water development going on there very day. There are a number of outfits punching holes down toward China. Such a well as the one the Riverside Water Company corraled last week is now flowing 290 inches of water. Everyone that saw it at first magnified it to a thousand inches or so, but by actual measurement it is flowing very close to 300 inches. Call it the even figure for calculation. At that rate it pours forth 3,888,000 gallons every single day. Enough to supply a population of 64,800 people with all the water they want to use.

It means, too, that enough water comes from Mother Earth's bosom every twenty-four hours to cover 518,-400 square feet of ground one foot deep with the preclous fluid. Ponder over that, and then wonder if it is not worth your while to come out to see it for yourself. And it is not only one well, but there are tens and twenties and fifties of them ranging from just a flow, to the gusher mentioned above. The Gage Canal has fifty-five wells in operation, and there is enough water flowing today through its main channel to furnish over three hundred thousand people with water, to the tune of 18,500,000 gallons every time the sun goes round. But this water is not used for domestic supply at all. It goes forth on its mission of mercy to supply the wants of some 700,000 thirsty orange and lemon trees, which means that next season the people will get a return of over a hundred and fifty million ripe oranges and lemons from the lands under the Gage Canal alone. All this is only a portion of the result Riverside is deriving from the rushing flow of "Agua Fria" through the favorable location of the San Bernardino artesian belt, which is just high enough above the Gage and Riverside canals to supply their needs.

Summerland Oil Field.

EVELOPMENT work on the interesting oil field at Summerland, on the coast of Santa Barbara county, is steadily progressing. The recently formed Duquesne Oil Company is building a thousandfoot wharf into the channel, which will be utilized as a derrick platform. The Santa Barbara correspondent of The Times writes as follows:

of The Times writes as follows:

"Within the next thirty days Summerland will probably see such a boom as she has not seen before for several years. There is the promise of a great activity there and the oil development will undoubtedly be increased in a very large measure.

"The Oxnard Oil Company has a contractor now at work cutting plies above Ellwood, and as soon as a satisfactory number are transported to Summerland, work will commence upon a thousand-foot wharf of substantial construction. This will employ a large number of men and will set much money affort.

"The Sunset Oil Company, like the Oxnard Company, a new corporation, has already placed orders for lum-ber for a 600-foot wharf. This will be built out from the Stevens property. The directors have not fully decided upon their plans and there is a probability that decided upon their plans and there is a probability that this wharf may be made much larger.

"The general idea of the oil men here seems to be that if wells can be sunk far out in the water a big oil flow will be struck, but the wharves necessary to such operations are of course very expensive and are hazard-ously perishable. If paying wells are sunk, however, as far out as 1000 feet, some person will go still farther out in the hope of striking the fountain lead of the whole Summerland supply, and getting an enormous output."

The Summerland Advance course

The Summerland Advance says:

"It is only a matter of a short time now, in the opta-ion of many, when the entire sea front of Summerland will be gridironed with platforms covered with oil wells. The oil is so easy to secure here, and the certainty of securing it when a well is sank makes it easy for us to prophesy that our resources will not much longer go egging for capital.

"The price of oil in Los Angeles this week is $1.06 f.o.b. In Los Angeles the life of an oil well is not over a year or fifteen months. In Summerland, for all we know to the contrary, a well may be good for 100 years. Wells sunk five years ago are still good producers, and it is logical to presume that five years hence they will still be good producers. A good well will pay itself out in less than two years, and the poorest in two and one-half years, and after that the entire output, minus cost of handling and pumping, is pure gain.

"Today, if it were not for the enormous fictitious value placed upon casing by the recent cornering of that article by the iron trust forcing it from 60 cents to $1.20 a foot, we would witness a greater activity than ever before in the history of the Summerland oil industry. Everybody is talking development, but all hesitate when they consider the cost. The value of oil property is also advancing. One gentleman who, two years ago would have sold his plant for $10,000, was offered and refused $21,000 for the property one day last week. He said he was well satisfied with his investment; that he had other investments where his money was not netting him 4½ per cent, while his oil property was returning 15 per cent, on every dollar he had put into it.

"Several other flattering offers to sell have been made and refused. It is safe to predict that as soon as eas-

A New Stage Line.

THERE has been rapid development of the mining camps out on the desert, along the Santa Fé line. It is announced that a stage line is to be run from Manvel, on the California Eastern Railroad, to Searchlight, a new mining camp. The Riverside Enterprise

"Manvel is thirty-five miles from Blake on the Sants Fé, and twenty-five miles from the mining camp. It is Mr. Bartee's intention to run a stage each way every day between Manvel and the camp, and this service will be increased as the demand for it arises.

"Ed Bartee and Will Sennett went out with the rigs, and they will drive them. They left with bag and baggage prepared to make the best of the situation in that lonesome and desert country.

"Searchlight, the new mining camp, is growing fast, and the rich prospects that have been uncovered there recently are sure to make of the camp a very important one before the summer is ever.

"Among the Riversiders who have got in on the ground floor in the camp are J. Thompson, W. M. Bartee, W. S. Collins, Jim Noble and Bill Camp."

A Cross-country Railroad.

AN BUENA VENTURA has a Business Men's Club which has been actively considering possible steps for the development work of that city and the surrounding country. Among other things, it is proposed to try to secure from either the Southern Pacific or the Southern California Railway cross-country railroad from Bakersfield to Ventura. The Ventura Free Press says:
"It seems that the completion of the Valley road to Bakersfield has awakened sharp competition in railroad matters and both the Santa Fé and Southern Pacific are looking over the field with a view to new feeders. are looking over the field with a view to new feeders. The members of the club and Venturians generally are onthusiastic over the idea of having another railroad enter this city and county. The route from Bakersfield to Ventura would afford a tide water outlet for the upper San Joaquin Valley, without the great engineering difficulties which add so much to the cost of transportation like the Tehachapi Pass and San Fernando tunnel, or even the Tejon Pass, which it is estimated it would cost $3,000,000 for the Santa Fé to build through, besides the distance is fifty miles shorter than to Los Angeles on any other tide water point. The advantages to Ventura cannot be overestimated, when it is understood that there is outgoing tonnage from Bakersfield amounting to 2800 carloads per year, while the construction of this proposed road would add at least 6000 carloads per year of sulphur, asphalt, and petroleum, through the immense deposits which the road would pass. Already there are indications that one of these lines will construct a branch road to the Sunset sulphur and petroleum deposits which lie right in the route from Bakersfield to Ventura, about fifty miles from Bakersfield. The Business Mea's Club unanimously agreed to aid the new project in every possible way, and committees were appointed to more closely investigate and to take steps at once to bring the matter before the public for prompt and decisive action, for they regard the prospects for getting the new line as most excellent."

Redlands Orange Association has issued its eighth annual statement, which makes an excellent showing. In his introduction to the summary of the eason's business, the secretary of the a sociation says:

"The orange season just cosed has been of much shorter duration than the previous one, on account of the shortness of the crop, more especially of the later varieties. The prices, however, that have been obtained have been quite satisfactory, and although the total quantity shipped by the association was forty-eight cars less than the previous season, the gross receipts were $4729.41 more.

"The musual quantity of small or off sizes far exceeded the regular demand, which caused a falling off in values on those sizes quite materially, thereby affecting unfavorably the general average, notwithstanding this fact, however, the average prices realized were well maintained, and the season may be counted as a very

"The demand for the well-known brands of the association has been active throughout the season, and our reputation for superior packing and care in handling has been fully maintained, as the excellent prices realized will substantiate.

"The fost of packing and handling has been 33 cents a box, or 3 cents a box more than last season. This difference was owing mainly to the increased cost of boxes and other material used in packing, extra labor required in assorting the fruit, and one loss from failure, amounting to about % of a cent per box."

Orange Boxes by Machinery.

T IS announced that a company has been organized in Riverside, for the manufacture of orange boxes by machinery. The nailing machine is said to have a capacity of 600 boxes per day, and can be run by one man. The power used is leverage.

Big Celery Field.

T IS stated that over a thousand acre be raised this year in the peat land d ange county, an increase of about 50 per clast year. Smeltzer, the celery king, is said to have recently paid $5000 for fifteen acres of peat land, and now owns over three hundred aces.

N SPITE of the fact that, in consequence of the light rainfall, one of the beet-sugar factories of Southern California will have a very short run this son, while the other two will not do nearly as well as they would in an average season, the output of sugar for the coming campaign will be quite large, the product of the three factories being estimated at nearly forty million pounds, which, at 5 cents a pound, represents a value of $2,000,000.

San Diego Cigars,

THE San Diego papers announce that Johnson and Halstead, the pioneer tobacco-growers of the El Cajon Valley in Riverside nty, are ma excellent grade of cigars, from tobacco grown in the valley. It is said that they have a stock of tobacco on hand sufficient to make over half a million cigars, which will sell at 10 cents each.

THE Santa Ana Blade tells, as follows, how the owner of a piece of land in Orange county lifted a mortgage on a piece of property by raising a crop

Steve McPherson of the little village of McPherson east of here, was at one time the owner of a thirteen-acre tract of land in that section, but a recurrence of bad seasons and various other causes so embarrassed the owner that he was forced to mortgage the property and that encumbrance, with the interest, soon made plain the fact that the mortgage would take the place. But Mr. McPherson resolved to try one more crop and the crop was potatoes, and the result has shown the wisdom of his choice.

"The price of potatoes went skyhigh early in the season and, as if to help McPherson out, his crop grew and prospered in proportion to the rise in price. When the market quotations had reached the point where none but millionaires could afford the luxury, Mr. McPherson sold his whole crop to an eastern buyer at a sum which is said to have netted him $125 per acre cash.

"How much he made on the transaction is no business of the writer, but his many friends are pleased to hear that he cashed a check big enough to lift the mortgage held on his place by the Bank of California and can now be found at his house in McPherson, for which he has a clear title."

ORK on the cycleway between Pasadena and Los Angeles is progressing. The Pasadena Star

The first cut on the cycleway grade is now down about twenty-five feet. This cut, which will be forty feet deep when finished, will be about half of the whole line as to amount of earth removed, the whole being about twelve thousand square yards. The grade will be very light, not more than 2.80 per cent. anywhere, and when it is understood that Raymond avenue, in front of the Star office is 3.10 per cent., its ease will be appreciated. The curves will also be long, so that the ride will be a very easy trip either way. The Los Angeles end lands at the Plaza, whence the rider has paved streets to any part of the city."

IN TRIBUTARY TERRITORY.

New Colorado River Steamboat

FORCE of ship carpenters from San Diego is at work in Yuma, on the Cuchan, a new boat, which will navigate the raging Colorado for the Colorado Steam Navigating Company. The Yuma Sun gives the following description of the craft:

"The new boat will be 140 feet long with a thirty-twofoot beam, and will be the lightest draught boat ever placed on the Colorade in command. As soon as the Cuchan is ready for service, Capt. Polhamus will place the Mohave on the dry dock for repairs."

A Creamery for Phoenix.

ROUND has been broken in Phoenix, Ariz., for a ew creamery, to the completion of which the dairymen of the Salt River Valley are looking forward with satisfaction. The Phoenix Stockman says: "The building is to be built of brick, after the latest model of construction in the East, and is to be com-pleted by July 1. The placing in position of the ma-chinery, etc., will require about two weeks longer, so the creamery will be ready for the patronage of the public by about the middle of July.

"The creamery will have facilities for handling 10,000 pounds of milk per day at the outset, but the power is sufficient to add considerable to this capacity when needed, so that there will be no danger of getting more milk and cream than the creamery will be able to handle, though the indications point to a remarkable record dle, though the indications point to a remarkable record from the very first day.

"The projector and builder, W. C. Dawes, is one of the best-known men in the valley, and an old and experienced, successful business man, and as the office will have his personal attention, we can assure the many patrons of the new establishment that they will secure prompt and polite treatment at the hands of the management of the new creamery.

"This journal is especially pleased at the turn matters have taken along this line, because we have the cause of the dairymen of the valley at heart, and we also have a pride in seeing the butter of the valley taking a front rank among the consumers of the Southwest. This can only be brought about by the production of a first-class product, such as can be produced here, of a first-class product, such as can be produced here, if the preper effort is made, but which has not been made in the past. Let the good work go on as rapidly as possible. The people are anxiously awaiting the date for the opening of the new creamery."

HISTORIC TREES. PALMS AND OTHER SPECIMENS IN AND ABOUT LOS ANGELES.

By a Special Contributor.

T IS doubtful whether many citizens of Los Angeles are aware of the number of rare and interesting trees that are to be found in and about this city. All are familiar, in a general way, with a variety of palms, peppers, eucalypti, and other trees, which do not grow in the East except in hothouses or, at least, under protection from the weather, but there are a considerable number of individual trees in this vicinity that are particularly interesting. One of these is the cabbage palm (Livistona australis,) growing in the Childs home grounds on South Main street. This is altogether the largest, oldest and most elegant specimen of this tree in this State. It was planted by the late Mr. Childs nearly thirty years ago, and has now reached a height of twenty-seven feet, and exhibits a stem devoid of foliage for rearly twelve feet of its length. There are several of these palms in an about the city that display crowns of foliage quite as expansive as that of the one in the accompanying picture, but none that approach it in the slender, taper elegance of its trunk. Proportionately to the burden of foliage that it carries, it seems almost incredible that this broadly-crowned plant should attain an occasional height of 130 feet, with a steam diameter rarely exceeding eighteen inches at the ground.

The "Kondo,' as the cabbage palm is known to the native Queenslanders and Victorians, abounds throughout extra-tropical Eastern Australia, and is turned to a number of practical uses by the inhabitants. They cut out the bud—the very heart of the undeveloped crown—and this is eaten either raw or baked. Leichardt, in cabbage palm (Livistona australis,) growing in the sa, from overesting of cabbage palm; but it did not injurious to those who eat of it in moderation." This most refreshing truism would probably hold good of cabbages as well as of cabbage palms.

The natives also gather the undeveloped leaves, or fronds, and these, after steeping and maceration in boiling water, yield a strong, flue, grass-like fiber, that is used in making a hat scarcely inferior to the best Panama products. The southern country is largely indebted to L. J. Stengel of this city for the very considerable dissemination of this palm fifteen or more years ago. Its slow growth, relatively, to the common California fan palm, and its susceptibility to frosts while young, has operated disadvantageously to its universal planting.

California fan palm, and its susceptibility to frosts while young, has operated disadvantageously to its universal planting.

An ideal spec men of the Bidwell pine (Bunya-bunya,) from a purely scenic standpoint, is the one standing on that portion of the Charles Silent place now belonging to Mrs. O. P. Posey. Larger, older, but less impressive, is a tree on the southwest corner of Fourth and Main streets, set out by Mr. Hellman some twenty-five years ago, where it has compounded interest in the matter of bulk, at the expense of many of the graceful touches that make a perfect tree a thing for love and veneration. The overcrowding of the tree on Fourth street is not altogether responsible for its decadence, for some beautiful pines, like unto the next most attractive thing in nature, a beautiful woman, being to wane in the very heyday of youth.

Such is the Bunya-bunya on Fourth street, nor can the craft of the cunning gardener, nor the touch of Midas, arrest its fugitive charms. Its economic value is the chief attraction that it now poscesses, and if it shall remain where it stands for another quarter of a century will make a valuable saw log. The wood is strong and light, and sighs that I have seen of it were exceedingly prettily marked and dotted. Unlike too many antipodean woods, it neither twists, warps nor cracks in seasoning, and would make a fair substitute for our nearly-inimitable white pina. Its commercial use, even at home, is restricted, for the Queensland government prohibits the felling of these trees upon crown lands, finding it more economical to preserve them as food-nut trees for the aborigines than to supply them with firearms, fire-water, boomerangs, clothes and other things that they flourish best without.

clothes and other things that they flourish best without. This pine bears enormous cones, that contain nuts proportionately large and that closely resemble our American sweet chestnut in taste.

I. H. Maiden, an authority on Australian trees, states positively that a prolonged diet of these nuts tends to cannabalism, therefore it is perhaps fortunate that none of these trees that I know of in Southern California, though, bearing cones heavily, have as yet produced anything but abortive seeds.

Research has brought to light an interesting trait of heredity among the different nomadic tribes of Australian savages. Single tribes have for generations past repaired to particular groups of Bunya-bunya in the month of January, when the fruits are ripe; nor does one tribe ever invade the preserves of another tribe. In the rare instances that this tribal etiquette was infringed upon, the offender, until stopped by recent repressive government measures, was treated precisely as the chestnuts were—baked and promptly eaten.

This tree attains a maximum height of 150 feet and a stem diameter of four feet. That on the Hellman place has acquired nearly two-thirds of these dimensions, in the brief period of twenty-five years.

In front of the house of E. B. Forester, on Seventh street, west of Pearl, stands a Bangalow, or Illawarra palm (Ptychosperma elegans,) and a glimpse of it carries one with a bound into the heart of the tropics. It vividly suggests the jungle itself, and fancy, if given some rein, portrays the accompaniments of a half-clad Indian maiden, a waving mass of reeds, and the gleaming teeth of a brindled tiger in the foreground.

But, alas, the mise en scene is only a prosaic, conventional villa front, and in the home of the bangalow reeds do not abound, the maidens are all unclad and the fiercest thing that provis is the lissoms kangaroo. Years ago, when the leady inhabitants of the tropical world were to me the alphant of one and all things, I came upon the informatic that the bangalow of all most torrid Queersiand-foo ad its way, far south into the cool, aye, sometimes frosty, defles in the Blue way. South Wales. Up to this time the sen only the petted, coddled, darling of s, and it took moral courage and a long tone out to bet the sport of even a South and winter. Mr. Forester acquired the cours, and it too moral courage and a long to one out to belithe sport of even a South-la winter. Mr. Forester acquired the courage and the courage and respectively a south-la winter and south a winter of the sport of even a South-la winter convictions, and now for more than years this charming and graceful pain has been the admiration of thousinds of people.

Since that time a very considerable number have been set on the hill lands in the western part of the city, and in a few years more will contribute a more distinctively tropical aspect to that section of the city than the fans, or indeed, any of the feather-leaved palm now in cultivation. Though the first insistent promotor of its planting, the writer must disclaim all credit for its original out-of-doors use. That honor belongs to one becook, whose original planting, some years previous, was on Sand street, where, smcthered by other vegetation and dwarfod by neglect, the original has continued to eke out an unlovely and almost unknown existence.

The Illawarra grows to a height of seventy or eighty feet, and is of such abundance in the tropical Queensland scrub that the settlers use the long, slendor, polished shafts for fence rails. The natives also make water baskets of the leaves, and even eat the mawkish, insipid fruit; but, then, an aborigine eats of everything at hand, and hence, this is no criterion of the value of bangalow seeds as tid-bits.

[Milwaukes Wisconsin:] A certain American railroad president hes a pet cat, who travels about in his private car with him. Many patrons of the line of which he is the head, have noticed Betsy curled up in a window, is the head, have noticed Betsy curled up in a window, or soberly washing her face on the rear platform. About two years ago the private car of President Canniff stopped one cold winter night in the Union depot of Fort Wayne, Ipd. While the president was in the city attending to some business G. Berrell Taylor, the porter of his private car, was standing on the steps taking in a bit of fresh air. He says he saw coming about the homeliest cat that he ever looked at. She was all bones and corners, without an ouace of meat that would tell how the joints were moved. The tabby yowled in such distressing tones that the porter fed her, and vows she ate as much as a man. "Betsy" was then invited to leave, but insisted on staying.

and finally had to be dropped overboard by a strong grip on the nape of the neck. The train at that time was making good headway out of the city, and all expected that tabby was being left far behind. This proved that they had not counted on what sort of stuff there was under all these bones, that had been the most conspicuous part of the animal.

When the train got out to West Fort Wayne one of the brakemen called Mr. Taylor's attention to a homely bit of hair and bones on the truck of the car. An examination proved that it was Betsy. If there had been any doubt in the mind of the porter before it was dispelled now, and Betsy was at once put down as belonging to the nopo class. She was thrown off into an ash heap on the side of the road as the train started, and this time all were sure that Betsy had missed her train. There was another surprise for them at Knox, some distance on, when the "car tapper" came along and found her royal highness holding down a berth on the bumpers and covered with snow from head to foot. She again submitted to being tossed further than ever off into the siding, and seemed to feel that this was to be a part of her life hereafter. The rumbling of the car wheels was no sooner heard on the start away, however, before Betsy was back on the bumpers again as big as life, and there she stayed until the car reached Stoney Island, 140 miles away.

The next morning when President Canniff got out to commence the day's business he was introduced to the new occupant of his car, who at that time was putting on a little bit of avoirdupois on her very lean sides by means of some bits of veal, which had been selected from the scraps of the culinary department of the train on which they had been traveling all the night. Few cats in the country have the record of having ridden 140 miles on the bumpers of a flying express train on a cold winter night. It this is true it is also equally true that few cats have performed feats which have recommended them so strongly to the good graces of the officials of

"MARY HAD A LITTLE LAMB."

[London Telegraph:] No composition in our language is more widely known than the verses of uncertain authorship and striking r'inplicity, beginning "Mary had a little lamb." This lyric has been translated into modern Greek and has been added to the musical repertoire of several schools in the City of the Violet Crown, and wherever the piece is introduced it is greatly appreciated by the rising Athenians. But local tastes had to be gratified, and these required a modification of the English sentiment. In Greece it is not customary to make a pet of a lamb. A young goat is the favorite, a dark-haired specimen being preferred, so the Hellenic version begins: "Mary had a little kid, its coat was black as coal."

Dr. W. Seward Webb knows railroading from top bottom and frequently amuses humself by running a engine.
